The Morld's Classics

CXXXIV

ARISTOPHANES FOUR PLAYS IN ENGLISH VERSE

FRERE

OXFORD UNIVERSITY PRESS

LONDON AMEN HOUSE, E 0 4
EDINBURGH GLASGON LEIPTIG
COPENAGEN NEW YORK TORONTO
MPLBOURYE CAPETOWN BOMBAL
CALGUTTA MADRAS SHANGHAL

HUMPHREY MILFORD PUBLISHER TO THE UNIVERSITY

ARISTOPHANES

FOUR PLAYS

TRANSLATED INTO ENGLISH VERSE BY

JOHN HOOKHAM FRERE

WITH AN INTRODUCTION BY
W W MERRY, D D
RECTOR OF LINCOLN COLLEGE
OXFORD

OXFORD UNIVERSITY PRESS LONDON HUMPHREY MILFORD

ARISTOPHANES

Born,	Athens	•	•	•	circa 444
Died		•	٠	•	circa 386	B C.
	Jone	т Но	ORNA	M FR	ERE
Born,	London	•	•	•	May 21, 1	769.
Died,	Malta.				January 7, 1	846.

Frere's Translations of Aristophanes's 'Acharnians', 'Knights', 'Birds', and 'Frogs' were printed for private circulation in 1839, and the first three were published in 1840. In 'The World's Classics' the four plays were first published in 1907, and reprinted in 1912 and 1928

CONTENTS

				PAGE
ODUCTION	•		•	VII
Acharnians				1
Knionts				. 73
BIRDS		•		165
Frogs				269
	Knionts Birds	Acharnians Knights Birds	Acharnians Knights Birds	Acharnians Knights Birds

INTRODUCTION

1

THE RIGHT HON JOHN HOOKHAM FEERE, Whose brilliant translation of some of the most famous plays of Aristophanes forms the text of the present volume, was born on May 21, 1769 He was educated at Eton and was an intimate friend of George Canning From school he entered Casus College, Cambridge, and became a Fellow of that Society In connexion with Canning and other accomplished friends he started the Antijacobin, a witty magazine of paredy and satire, which, however, in spite of its cleverness, only survived for eight months. But 'The Loves of the Triangles' (a parody on Darwin's 'Loves of the Plants'), 'The University of Göttingen', and 'The Needy Knife Grinder' are still remembered and quoted. We are net here concerned with Frere's short parliamentary experience, his connexion with the Foreign Office, or his success and unsuccess in the Diplomatic Service In 1818, owing to the illness of his wife, he retired from active life, and finally made his home in Malta. It seems an almost hopeless task to decide the dates, order and place of publication of the different plays of Aristophanes translated by Frere He describes himself (see inf p xiii) as 'a very unsystematic scholar'

He was even more 'unsystematic' as an author and publisher. The Edinburgh Reviewer (no. 135, April, 1872) is well within the mark when he says, 'The Bibliography of Frere's Aristophanes is somewhat puzzling, and we cannot say that the Memoir 1 throws much light upon it'. It would not be too much to say that the Memoir only serves to increase the confusion. The plays were printed at rare intervals in fragmentary form, and the type often kept standing for a long time

Writing from Malta in 1827, Frere speaks of the Frogs as finished 'as far as they are capable of being translated', and directions seem to be given for the printing of 250 copies for distribution, and for sending the remainder, in the ordinary way of business, to a bookseller in Cambridge. In 1831 he prepares a title-page for the Frogs, and an advertisement stating that the play is now finished, and that the first forty pages had been printed ten years previously (Memoir, p 208) But in 1837 (p. 276) it would appear that the book was even then not finished; and it might never have seen the light at all but for the helpful importunity of Frere's friend, G Cornewall Lewis (see inf. p xiii, though the allusion there is to the Acharmans and not the Frogs) Two years later, the printing, which was being done in the Government Printing Office in Malta, was stopped for want of paper. In despite of all this, we find the strange contradiction that the copy of the Frogs in the British unimportant verbal alterations it is identical with the same passage as printed in our text (inf. pp. 51-6), which shows that at least some portion of this play, too, had been translated by him as early as 1820.

¹ Memoir of John Hookham Frere, by the Rt. Hon Sir Bartle Frere. Second edition Revised with additions. Pickering, London, 1874.

The article in the Quarterly is in the form of a review of Vol. I of A Translation of the Comedies of Aristophanes by T Mitchell, A.M., late Fellow of Sidney-Sussex College, Cambridge (London, 1820) The book receives considerable praise from the reviewer, who, however, takes the opportunity of detailing at length his own view of what such a translation ought to be, so as to show how far he considers Mitchell has fallen Frere's reasoning is curious and subtle, and it seems worth while to reproduce it in as short a form as possible in this Introduction, in order that the reader may judge for himself whether Frere has been able to come up to his own ideal. The main cause of the defect which he finds in Mitchell's rendering, 'and of the disappointment which will be experienced by those who are best acquainted with the original, if they expect to find the various forms of language, and the phrases expressive of character, represented in a satisfactory manner by English equivalents, is to be attributed to the adoption of a particular style; the style of our ancient comedy in the beginning of the sixteenth [sic] century'. The comedy of that period appeared to Frere as a fancy portrait of the society of the time The likeness was good enough to be instantly recognized, and the embellishments did not greatly detract from its truth. 'As the language and characters were idealized, and therefore, to a certain degree, removed from reality and experience, the admission of this improbability would require to be compensated by a greater apparent probability in the only part which remained, viz. the action and events But the ancient Aristophanic comedy proceeded upon a principle of compensation totally different. species of composition the utter extravagance and impossibility of the supposed action is an indispensable requisite, the portion of truth and reality, which is admitted as a counterpoise, consists wholly in the It is a grave, humorous, character and language impossible GREAT LIE, related with an accurate mimicry of the language and manners of the persons introduced, and great exactness of circumstance in the inferior details. In those parts of the plays in which the circumstances are the most outrageously impossible, the truth and reality of the dialogue are the most studiously laboured.'

From this point of view Mitchell's style, borrowed from our early comedies, has been pitched too high, and partakes of too artificial a character. Even Ben Jonson, if he had attempted a translation of Aristo phanes in the same style which he has employed in his own comedies, would have failed to produce an adequate representation of the original Jonson's language, though not purely natural, though not an imitation of daily speech, was yet conformable to it. But Mitchell's rendering, which attempts to reproduce the diction of times that are past, constantly offends, in Frere's judgement, against the propriety of language. 'The language of translation', he goes on to say, 'ought as far as possible to be a pure, impalpable, and invisible element, the medium of thought and feeling, and nothing more: it ought never to attract attention to itself, hence, all phrases that are remarkable in themselves, all importations from foreign languages and quotations, ought as far as possible to be avoided'. Frere thinks that Mitchell belongs to the class of Spirited Translators, 'whose spirit and ability consist in substituting a modern variety or peculiarity for an ancient one, to the utter confusion of all unity of time; place, and character, leaving the mind of the reader bewildered as in a masquerade, crowded and confused with ancient and modern costumes' On the other side of the line is the Faithful Translator, who renders into English all the conversational phrases according to their grammatical and logical form, without any reference to the current usage, which has affixed to them an arbitrary sense, and appropriated them to a particular and definite purpose The Spirited Translator employs the corresponding modern phrases, substituting (with the desire for liveliness and vivacity) the peculiarities of his own time and nation for the peculiarities of ancient times But if we are to be extreme to mark what is done amiss, what shall we say to Frere, whose native 'liveliness and vivacity' drew him sometimes into the track of the Spirited Translator, and introduced into his version such unmistakable modernisms as 'Lord help me', 'O lawk', 'Cockney', even to the extent of making a pun on the name of the poet 'Crabbe'? However, he sets up as his ideal the Lawful and True Translator, who in a genuine philosophic spirit produces the right effect by proceeding upon the 'principle of generalization', in which the local and peculiar allusions should serve only as types and abstracts of universal and permanent forms. Thus Lamachus and Dicaeopolis in the Acharmans are permanent contrasts of human nature, 'and like their parallels, Don Quixote and Sancho, belong equally to all nations and times' Similarly, the Envoys in the same play might just as well have come from the court of the Czar Peter or that of Louis XIV, as from Thrace or Persia. The two countrymen who bring their market-wares to deal with Dicaeopolis are just the extremes of rustic character—are extravagant caricature, but a caricature of the genus. These rules thus laid down by the translator for himself may give some opportunities for pleasant criticism to the reader as he enjoys these versions

How great was the appreciation with which these translations were welcomed by scholars immediately on their appearance—although, being privately printed, they were maccessible to the general public-may be seen from the laudatory notice in the Classical Museum. vol. 1. 1844, from the pen of George Cornewall Lewis, who was no less exacting as a critic than he was earnest and sincere as a politician. Frere speaks of Cornewall Lewis, in one of the notes inserted in the Knights, as a friend 'whose kind importunities had extorted the publication of the Acharmans', and who had shown friendly zeal in forwarding that play through the press, and correcting some maccuracies incidental to the work of a very unsystematic scholar' In the notice already referred to, Lewis says, 'if anybody was likely to meet with success in this undertaking, it was the author of the admirable imitation of Darwin in the Aninacobin (see above, p vii), and of the excellent poem of Whistlecraft, the model on which Lord Byron wrote his Beppo . In our opinion Mr. Frere's success, as a translator of Aristophanes, has been greater than might have been reasonably anticipated' For the reviewer did not hesitate to say that 'The reproduction of the comedies of Aristophanes in a modern language seems almost a hopeless task. The endless variety of his style and metres, the exuberance of his witty imagination, the richness and flexibility of the Attic language in which he wrote, and the perpetual by-play of allusions (often intimated merely by a pun, a metaphor, or a strange new compound) to the statesmen, poets, political events and institutions, manners and domestic history of his times, appear to make it equally difficult to execute a poetical version which shall adhere to the letter, or render the spirit of the original.

The introduction and notes which Frere has added to his translations make any further elucidations unnecessary, though it must be remembered that some of the translator's views on metre and interpretation would hardly satisfy modern criticism. Nor is this the place to discuss at any length the difficult question as to the political position of Aristophanes. The period of the Old Attic Comedy, of which Aristophanes is the chief representative, is a very brief one in the history of literature, covering little more than half a century (say, 446–392 B C); during which no less than forty writers of comedy, known to us by name or by some short fragments, produced nearly three hundred plays, of which the titles are preserved. It was a period of exceptional literary activity and political freedom But it must be remembered that the management of the Theatre was in the hands of the rich. The Archon granted the necessary licence, and the Choragi, who mounted the play for the stage, vied with one another in splendid and costly preparations. This must have had some bearing on the actual freedom of the poet. He had besides a mixed audience to reckon with, so that if the reinement of the lyrical portion of his work and the aristocratical opinions which he expressed satisfied one set of hearers, there was also the vulgar mob whose taste for ribaldry and horse play had to be considered It was only in this period of freedom and prosperity that outspoken political satire was possible It may be said that the Old Comedy, though really the offspring of democratic liberty, placed itself at the service of the oligarchs.

The point of view which Aristophanes adopted was not altogether that of a political partisan. His gaze went back to the days of Marathon and Salamis and the happy times which followed the Persian Wars. He was generally opposed to 'the progressives' the demagogues were prepared to squander the splendid inheritance to which Athens had succeeded the new sophistical education was sapping the foundations of society the national ambition was fraught with danger and made a lasting peace impossible. Such being the poet's avowed ideal, it is impossible to claim him as the champion of a definite political party. This impossibility is amusingly emphasized in a note appended to the review by Cornewall Lewis, which has been already quoted. Commenting on the divergent estimates given of Aristophanes he writes 'we observe from the instructive work on Thucydides by Roscher that two new hypotheses have lately been propounded in Germany with respect to the character of Aristo-One theory . . makes him a new-Hegelian; ie a member of the modern ultra-liberal school in philosophy and religion The other view is taken by Droysen, the author of a translation of Aristophanes . who considers him a clever roue, a man without principles, belonging to no political party, without patriotism and without religion, but overflowing with bold genius and capable of embellishing the commonest subjects by the magic of his wit. . . . If we may be allowed to use a modern party phrase, we should call Anstophanes a tory-radical His opinions belong to the aristocratic or conservative side, but his character as a comic poet, and the means which he uses in that capacity, place him in the category of demagogues' This judgement is sixty years old, but it is none the worse for that One would like, if it were possible, to accept the profession that Browning puts into the poet's mouth—only it is too good to be true!

. I pursued my warfare till each wound
Went through the mere man, reached the principle
Worth purging from Athenai Lamachos?
No, I attacked war's representative,
Kleon? No, flattery of the populace,
Sokrates? No, but that pernicious seed
Of Sophists whereby hopeful youth is taught
To jabber argument, chop logic, pore
On sun and moon, and worship Whirligig
Aristophanes' Apology (Complete Works, vol i, p 691).

circumstances of Ancient and Modern Drama is that in Athens the theatrical performances were not private enterprises, but were regularly organized by the State and supervised by the Archon, who alone could give permission to the poets to compete—this permission was technically called 'granting a chorus'. During the fifth century B c. the number of poets allowed to present comedies at any one festival was three, as in the case of tragedy, each poet only producing one play. It is probable that a group of three tragedies and a Satyric Drama was performed in the morning of each successive day of the festival, followed in the afternoon by a comedy 1

An attempt must now be made to give an impression of the theatre in which the comedies were acted, and for that purpose it will be best to confine the description to the Theatre of Dionysus, at Athens, as it probably appeared in the time of Aristophanes. This open-air stone theatre was begun about 499 B.C. and was continually improved and enlarged, though the main features remained the same

We have to imagine numerous tiers of stone-seats without backs occupying the natural slope of the hill to the south-east of the Acropolis, capable of accommodating thirty thousand spectators. A few front rows near the stage were reserved for priests and other religious officials and for distinguished personages whether Athenians or foreigners. These sloping rows of seats, completely open to the air, formed the Theatre; its shape being semi-circular or, roughly, in the form of a horseshoe Where the curve ended at each side. and the ground became flat at the bottom of the slope, a enoular plot of ground was marked off, called the Orchestra, or 'dancing place', because the Chorus performed their evolutions on it. Beyond the Orches tra and further from the audience rose the stage for the actors This was narrow, as no more than three actors appeared on the stage at the same time, except when the action of the play called for the presence of members of the Chorus, who in that case mounted by means of temporary wooden steps Behind the stage was a background of wood, generally representing the front of some building, with doors in it for the entrance and exit of the actors. But in such a play as the Birds the background must have presented a piece of wild country As the number of the agtors was limited to three, it was necessary that each of them should appear m various characters during the play, but these rapid changes were made easier as all the players were masks The costume of the actors in the Aristophanie Comedy (to omit certain elements of coarseness and indelicacy in the 'make up') was as a rule that of ordinary Athenian life They all wore portrait-masks, which Were easily recognizable as caricatures of such persons as Scerates, Lamachus, &c But when Cleon was represented in the Knights, the mask makers, it is said, did net dare to produce a likeness of that powerful demagogue Other grotesque masks besides the pertraits were naturally in use, resembling such monstrosities as we are familiar with in modern pantomime. It should be added that the actors were always male, even when representing female characters. As the mask concealed all facial expression, bodily gesture and tone of voice became of enhanced importance.

¹ Haigh, Attic Theatre, Second edition, p 35.

The Chorus, which in Comedy numbered twentyfour, marched in by a side entrance, and took their places in the Orchestra, wearing masks like the actors. Their costume would generally be the ordinary dress of the class which they represented—charcoal-burners, farmers, old men, Knights, middle-class women, &c: but occasionally they wore fancy-dresses, as in the Clouds and Birds. They performed the lyric portions of the play, and such other parts as did not belong to the dialogue of the actors Although the Orchestra, which they occupied, means properly a 'dancing place', we must not suppose that their evolutions at all resembled a modern ballet Their movements had more of military, precision, varied occasionally by something like a 'break-down'. Their 'dancing' meant much more than merely rhythmical movement of the feet, for it included the much more important elements of pose, gesticulation and mimicry, by which the Chorus sought to interpret to the audience the different feelings that the action of the play was intended to suggest The 'headman' of the Chorus, called 'Coryphaeus', directed the evolutions and sometimes took a solo part in the singing or recitative. The singing of the Chorus was in unison and the syllables clearly marked, so as to be more readily followed by an audience which did not possess 'a book of the words'. When the stage was left empty between the acts the Chorus sang various odes bearing on the plot and characters of the play, changing their position and facing the spectators till the actors returned A peculiar

DICAEOPOLIS, whose name may be interpreted as conveying the idea of honest polley, is the principal character in the play He is represented as a humorous shrewd countryman (a sort of Athenian Sancho), who (in consequence of the war, and the invasion of Attica by the Peloponnesian Army) had been driven from his house and property to take shelter in the City Here his whole thoughts are occupied with regret for the comforts he has lost, and with wishes for a speedy peace. The soliloquy in which he appears in the first scene, represents him seated alone in the place of assembly, having risen early to secure a good place, his constant practice (he says), in order 'to bawl, to abuse and interrupt the speakers', with the exception of those and those only, who are arguing in favour of an immediate peace. But the Magistrates and men of business, not having so much leisure on their hands, as the worthy countryman, are less punctual in their attendance, and he is kept waiting to his great discomfort, their seats are empty, and the Citizens in the market-place are talking and idling, or shifting about to avoid a most notable instrument of democratic coercion, namely a cord coloured with othre, which the officers stretch across the market-place, in order to drive the loiterers to the place of assembly. those that are overtaken by the rope, being marked by the ochre, besides the damage to their dress, hecoming liable to a nominal fine To avoid the sense of weariness. he is in the habit (as he tells us), upon such occasions, of giving a forced direction to his thoughts, and he gives a sample of his mode of employing this expedient, in the very first lines he is taking himself to recollect and sum up all the things that had occurred of late either to gratify or to annoy him. At length, however, he is relieved from the pursuit of this unsatisfactory pastime. The Magistrates arrive and take their seats—the place of Assembly is filled, and silence is proclaimed-when a new personage enters hastily Here we have an instance of the peculiar character of invention which belongs to the ancient comedy, in which a bodily form and action is given to those images, which have no existence except in the forms of animated or fanciful language a deity were to come down among the Athenians and pronose to conclude a peace for them, they would not listen to him'-This phrase is here exhibited in action; for the personage above mentioned is a demigod (descended imp ediately from Ceres herself, as he proves by a very rapid and confident recitation of his genealogy), but his offer of his services as a mediator is very ill received, and he very narrowly escapes being taken into custody

The next persons who present themselves to the Assembly are two Envoys returned from a mission to the Court of Persia, which they have contrived to prolong for several They relate all the hardships which they had undergone in luxurious entertainments and in tedious journeys with a splendid equipage they moreover had been detained by an unforeseen circumstance, on their arrival at the Capital. The state of things was such as Autolycus describes. The King is not at the Palace, he is gone to purge melancholy and air himself', but the King of Persia was not gone, like the King of Bohemia, on board a new slup', he was gone with a magnificent military retinue to the Golden Mountains, where, according to the Ambassador's report, he continued for eight months in an unremitting course of cathertics. On his return to the Capital, they had the honour of being presented and entertained at a most singular and marvellous banquet; finally they had succeeded in their mission, and had brought with them a confidential servant of the Crown of Persia (a nobleman of high rank though rather of a suspicious name), Shamartabas, commissioned to - declare His Majesty's intention to the people of Athens. Shamartabas holds the distinguished office and title of the King's Eye of course the mask which is assigned him is distinguished by an Eye of enormous size, the appearance of which and the gravity of gesture suited appearance of which and the gravity of gesture suited to such an exalted personage excite the rustic republican spleen of honest Dicacopolis The communications of the great Persian Courtier, being in his own language and consequently unintelligible, are variously interpreted Dicaeopolis takes upon himself to question him peremptorily, and in the course of the examination discovers a couple of effeminate Athenian fops, disguised as Eunuchs. in his train, this discovery however oreates no sensation -The King's Eye is invited with the usual honours to a Banquet in the Prytaneum, but when Dicaeopolis sees these impostors and enemics of his country, upon the point of being rewarded with a good dinnor, the indignation which is exoited in his independent spirit, decides at once his future destinies and the conduct of all the scenes which follow -In that tone which a person is apt to employ when he fancies that the zeal of his friends gives him a right to command their services, he calls out very peremptorily for Amphitheus, and without any preamble or prefatory request, directs him to proceed to Sparta without loss of time, and to conclude a separate peace for him (Dicaeopolis), his wife and family, advancing to him at the same time the principal sum of eight drachmas for that purpose

Another Envoy now appears, returned from a Court of a different description. He has not, like the former, any complaints to make, of having been overwhelmed with an excess of ostentation and profusion from the Grand Monarque of those times, he has resided with a sort of cotemporary Czar Peter, the Autocrat of Thrace, having lived (of course according to his own account) in a most joliy barbarous intimacy with that rising potentate, and inspiring him with the sincerest hearty zeal in favour of the polished state of Athens. His son, the heir apparent, had been admitted by the Athenians to the freedom of their City, an honour which in their opinion (as well as in that of Mr. Peter Putty in Foote's farce) any prince ought to be proud of, and the assembly are accordingly informed of the delight and enthusiasm with which the compliment had been accepted. They are presented moreover with a specimen of the auxiliary troops, somewhat singularly equipped, which their new aily is willing to employ in their service, but at a rate of pay which Dicacopolis exclaims against as scandalous Ho has soon other causes of complaint, for, attracted by the passion for garlie, which it seems is predominant amongst them, the Odomantians for that is the name of the tribe to which the new warriors belong) begin their operations by plundering the store which Dicaeopolis had provided for his own luncheon; outrageous at this injury, after reproaching the Magistrates with their apathy in suffering it, he takes, what it seems was an effectual mode of dissolving the Assembly, by declaring that a storm was coming on, and affirining that he has felt a drop of rain This sort of Polish Veto nullifies the proceedings of the Assembly, which is accordingly dissolved -Dicaeopolis is left lamenting over the pillago of his provisions, but his spirits are soon revived by the appearance of Amphitheus, who has returned with samples of Treaties of Peace or Truces These Treaties or Truces are typified by the wines employed in the libations by which they were ratified, a conceit, which in the language of the original appears less extravagant, the Greeks having only one and the same word by which they expressed the idea of a truce, and that of the libation by which it was rendered valid Amplitheus is in a hurry, having been (as he says) discovered and pursued by a number of old Rustics of Acharnae, who since the ruin of the vineyards of their village by the invading army, had become furious against a peace. Dicaeopolis tastes and discusses the qualities of the wines, and having fixed upon a sample of thirty years' growth, goes away with a determination to avail himself of the change in his affairs, by keeping the Feast of Bacchus once more in his own village, while Amphitheus runs off to avoid the Acharmans whom he had outrun, but who are still in quest of him

SCENE THE PNYX

DICAEOPOLIS.

How many things there are to cross and vex me, My comforts I compute at four precisely. My griefs and miseries at a hundred thousand Let's see what there has happen'd to rejoice me With any real kind of joyfulness, Come, in the first place I set down five talents, Which Cleon vomited up again and refunded, There I rejoiced. I loved the knights for that. Twas nobly done, for the interests of all Greece But again I suffer'd cruelly in the theatre A tragical disappointment.—There was I Gaping to hear old Aesohylus, when the herald Call'd out, 'Theognis', bring your chorus forward.' Imagine what my feelings must have been! But then Dexithous pleased me coming forward And singing his Bocotian melody But next came Chaeris with his music truly. That turn'd me sick, and kill'd me very nearly But never in my lifetime, man nor boy. Was I so vext as at this present moment. To see the Pnyx at this time of the morning Quite empty, when the Assembly should be full There are our Citizens in the market-place Lounging and talking, shifting up and down To escape the painted twine that ought to sweep

¹ A bad tragic poet, ridiculed in this play

The shoal of them this way, not even the presidents Arrived—they're always last, crowding and jostling To get the foremost seat, but as for peace They never think about it-Oh poor country As for myself, I'm always the first man Alone in the morning, here I take my place, Here I contemplate, here I stretch my legs, I think and think-I don't know what to think. I draw conclusions and comparisons, I ponder, I reflect, I pick my nose, I make a stink-I make a metaphor, I fidget about, and yawn and scratch myself; Looking in vain to the prospect of the fields, Loathing the city, longing for a peace. To return to my poor village and my farm, That never used to cry 'Come, buy my charcoal!' Nor 'Buy my oil!' nor 'Buy my anything!' But gave me what I wanted, freely and fairly, Clear of all cost, with never a word of buying, Or such buy-words. So here I'm come, resolved To bawl, to abuse, to interrupt the speakers, Whenever I hear a word of any kind Except for an immediate peace Ah there! The presidents at last; see, there they come! All scrambling for their seats—I told you so! HERALD Move forward there! Move forward all of ye! Further! within the consecrated ground. AMPHITHEUS Has anybody spoke? HER Is anybody Prepared to speak? AMPH. Yes, I HER Who are you and what? AMPH. Amphitheus the demigod. HER

HER Not a man?

AMPH No, I'm immortal, for the first Amphitheus Was born of Ceres and Triptolemus, His only son was Keleus, Keleus married Phaenarete my grandmother, Lykinus My father, was their son, that's proof enough

Of the immortality in our family The Gods moreover have dispatch'd me here Commission'd specially to arrange a peace Betwixt this city and Sparta—notwithstanding I find myself rather in want at present Of a little ready money for my journey The magistrates won't assist me

Constables ! HER

AMPH. O Keleüs and Triptolemus, don't forsake me! You pres dents, I say! you exceed your

You insult the assembly, dragging off a man That offer'd to make terms and give us peace

HER, Keep silence there

By Jove, but I won't be silent. DIC.

Except I hear a motion about peace
HER. Ho there! the Ambassadors from the King of Persia

Dic. What King of Persia? what Ambassadors? I'm sick of foreigners and foreign animals, Peacocks and Coxcombs and Ambassadors

HER. Keep silence there

What's here? What dress is that?

In the name of Echatana? What does it mean? AMB You sent us when Euthymenes was Archon. Some few years back, ambassadors to Persia. With an appointment of two drachmas each For daily maintenance

Alas, poor drachmas! Dic. Amb 'Twas no such easy service, I can tell you, No trilling inconvenience to be dragg'd Along those dusty dull Caystrian plains, Smother'd with cushions in the travelling chariots.

Percocks had been introduced at the public charge, and were exhibited menthly It is to be supposed that the exhibition had become rather stale.

The name of an unknown and extraordinary place is sometimes used to express wonder. In New England a thing is said to be 'Jerusalem fine'. Flanders in the time of Philip III served the Spaniards for a phrase of wonder 'No hay mas Flandes?

Obliged to lodge at night in our pavilions,

Jaded and hack'd to death

My service then Dro Was an easy one, you think! on guard all night.

In the open air, at the outposts, on a mat

AMB .. At our reception we were fore'd to drink Strong luscious wine in cups of gold and crystal ...

Dic. O rock of Athens; sure thy very stones

Should mutiny at such open mockery!

AMB (in continuation)

, with the Barbarians 'tis the test of manhood.

There the great drinkers are the greatest men ... Dio As debauchees and coxcombs are with us

AMB (in continuation)

... In the fourth year we reach'd the royal residence, But found the sovereign absent on a progress, Gone with his army to the Golden Mountains, To take his ease, and purge his royal person, There he remain'd eight months

Dic When did he close

His course of medicine?

With the full of the moon He rose, and left his seat, returning homeward.

There he admitted us to an audience,

And entertam'd us at a royal banquet

With a service of whole oxen baked in crust.

Dic. Oxen in crust! what hes, what trumpery!

Did ever any mortal hear the like?

AMB Besides they treated us with a curious bird, Much bigger than our own Cleonymus 'Tis call'd the Chousibus

Aye, by that same token

We're choused of our two drachmas AMB

Finally We've brought you here a nobleman, Shamartabas By name, by rank and office the King's Eye

Dic God send a crow to peck it out, I say,

And yours the Ambassador's into the bargain! HER. Let the King's Eye come forward

Dīa. Hercules ! What's here? an eye for the head of a ship! what point.

What headland is he weathering? what's your course'

What makes you steer so steadily and so slowly?

AND Come now, Shamartabas, stand forth, declare The kings intentions to the Athenian people.

> [Shamartabas here utters some words, which Orientalists have supposed to be the common formula prefixed to the edicts of the Persian Monarch—Iartaman exarksas apissonai satra

AMB You understand it?

Dra. No, by Jove, not I AMB [to DICAECPOLIS] He says the king intends to send us gold

[to SHAMARTABAS.] Explain about the gold. speak more distinctly

SHAMARTABAS Sen gooly Jaonau aphooly chest

Dro Well, that's distinct enough! What does he say? HER. Dic. That it's a foolish jest for the Ionians

To imagine that the king would send them gold.

Amb No, no!—He's telling ye of chests full of gold

Dic. What chests i you're an impostor—Stand away,

¹ The imaginative spirit of antiquity had transformed the head of a ship into the likeness of a human face, the keel served for a nose, a painted eye being inserted on each side, and served for a nose, a painted eye being inserted on each side, and a portion of the convex projections of the bow was coloured red, to represent a pair of cheeks, whence the epithet 'red cheeked' is applied to ships in Homer—The face thus produced was appropriated to Medusa by the addition of two snakes diverging from it, and running along the gunwale (according to Hipponax's description 'as if they were going to bite the head of the steersman') The whole vessel was thus converted into of the steersman) The wholes was thus converted most the form of a protecting amulet.—It appears by what Herodotus (iii. 58) says of the oracle addressed to the Siphnians, that the 'red cheeks' must have gone out of fashion in his time, but the 'eye' is still universal in the Mediterranean, and the writer of this note has seen the snake in its proper position and direction on the gunwale of small craft in the harbour of Valletta and in the Bay of Cadlz.

Keep off; and let me alone to question him [to Shamartabas] You, sir, you Persian! answer me distinctly

And plainly, in presence of this fist of mine; On pain of a royal purple bloody nose Will the king send us gold, or will he not? [Shamartabas shakes his head.

Have our ambassadors bamboozled us?

[SHAMARTABAS nods.

These fellows nod to us in the Green fashion;
They're some of our own people, I'll be bound
One of those eunuchs there I'm sure I know:
I'm positive it's Cleisthenes the Siburtian.
How durst you, you baboon, with such a beard,
And your designing wicked rump close shaved,
To pass yourself upon us for a eunuch?
And who's this other? Sure enough it's Strato!

HER Silence there! Keep your seats! The senate have invited the King's Eye To feast with them in the Prytaneum

Dic

Am't it enough to drive one mad? to drive one
To hang himself? to be kept here in attendance,
Working myself into a strangury,

Whilst every door flies open to these fellows. But I'll do something desperate and decided. Where is Amphitheus got to?

AMPH. Here am I.
Dic. There—take you these eight drachmas on my part.

And make a separate peace for me with Sparta, For me, my wife and children and maidservant And you—go on with your embassies and fooleries.

HER Theorus, our ambassador into Thrace,

Return'd from King Sitalces! 1

Theor Here am I
Dic. More coxcombs call'd for !—Here's another coming

¹ Theorus noted in the Wasps as a flattering, super-civil parasitical person See his efforts at reconciliation on page 14

THEOR. We should not have remain'd so long in Thrace

Dic. If you hadn't been overpaid I know you wouldn't_

But for the snow, which cover'd all the THEOR. country.

And buried up the roads, and froze the rivers 'Twas singular this change of weather happen'd Just when Theognis here, our frosty poet, Brought out his tragedy—We pass'd our time In drinking with Sitalces He's your friend, Your friend and lover, if there ever was one, And writes the name of Athens on his walls ' His son, your new-made fellow citizen. Had wish'd to have been enroll'd in proper form At the Apaturian festival, and meanwhile. During his absence, earnestly desires That the Apaturian sausages may be sent him He is urgent with his father to befriend His newly adopted countrymen, and in fine Sitalces has been so far work'd upon, He has sworn at last his solemn Thracian oath,

Standing before the sacrifice, to send

Such an army, he said, that all the Athenian people Shall think that there's a flight of locusts coming

Dic. Then hang me if I believe a word about it, Except their being locusts, that seems likely

THEOR. And now he has sent some warriors from a tribe

The fiercest in all Thrace.

Well, come-that's fair Dia HER. The Thracians that came hither with Theories!

Let them come forward! What the plague are these? Dic.

THEOR. The Odomantian army

Drc. The Odomantians?

¹ The common practice of lovers both in ancient and modern times, but in this instance there is probably an allusion to some public monuments which recorded the lung's alliance with the Athenians in terms flattering to their pational vanity

Thracians? and what has brought them here from

So strangely equipp'd, disguised, and circumcized?
Theor. These are a race of fellows, if you'd hire 'em.

Only at a couple of drachmas daily pay; With their light javelins, and their little bucklers, They'd worry and skirmish over all Boeotia.

Dic. Two drachmas for those scarecrows! and our seamen,

What would they say to it?—left in arrears, Poor fellows, that are our support and safeguard. Out, out upon it! I'm a plunder'd man I'm robb'd and ruin'd here with the Odomantians. They're seizing upon my garlic.

THEOR [to the Thracians] Oh, for shame, Let the man's garlic alone You shabby fellow, You countryman, take care what you're about; Don't venture near them when they're primed with garlic. o

Dic. You Magistrates, have you the face to see it, With your own eyes—your fellow citizen Here, in the city itself, robb'd by barbarians?

—But I forbid the assembly There's a change In the heaven! I felt a drop of rain! I'm witness!

Her. The Thracians must withdraw, to attend again

The first of the next month The assembly is closed.

Dic Lord help me, what a luncheon have I lost!

But there's Amphitheus coming back from Sparta

Welcome Amphitheus!

AMPH. I'm not welcome yet, There are the Acharnians pursuing me!

Dic How so?

AMPH. I was coming here to bring the Treaties, But a parcel of old Acharnians smelt me out, Case-harden'd, old, inveterate, hardhanded Veterans of Marathon, hearts of oak and iron, Slingers and smiters They bawl'd out and bellow'd; 'You dog, you villain' now the vines are ruin'd,

'You're come with Treaties, are you?' Then they stopp'd,

Huddling up handfuls of great slinging stones In the lappets of their cloaks, and I ran off, And they came driving after me pell-mell. Roaring and shouting -

Aye, why let them roar!

You've brought the Treaties?

AMPH. Aye, three samples of 'em, This here is a five years' growth, taste it and try Dic. Don't like it!

Eh? Амен.

Don't like it, it won't do, Dic. There's an uncommon ugly twang of pitch, A touch of naval armament about it.

AMPH. Well, here's a ten years' growth, may suit you better

Dic. No. neither of them. There's a sort of sourness

Here in this last, a taste of acid embassies.

And vapid allies turning to vinegar

AMPH. But here's a truce of thirty years entire Warranted sound.

O Bacchus and the Bacchanals! Dic This is your sort! here's nectar and ambrosia! Here's nothing about providing three days' rations, It says, 'Do what you please, Go where you will' I choose it, and adopt it, and embrace it. For sacrifice and for my private drinking In spite of all the Acharnians, I'm determined To remove out of the reach of wars and mischief. And keep the feast of Bacchus in my farm AMPH And I'll run off to escape from those Achar-

nians

Masses of men, when in a state of excitement, whatever may be their collective character or purpose, are apt to separate into two divisions, those of a milder and more reasonable temper taking the one side, and the more ardent and intractable taking the other. This is exemphified in the two Semiohoruses The first are upon the point of abandoning their pursuit, while the second persevere in it with unabated eagerness, indefatigable and (as they afterwards show themselves) implacable. The first, on the contrary, are by degrees pacified and

induced to listen to reason

This difference of feeling finally produces a struggle between them in which those who are of 'milder mood' obtain the advantage, and their opponents are obliged to call for assistance from Lamachus, a romantic enthusiastic military character, and, of course, as decided an advocate for war as Dicaeopolis (the Poet's dramatic representative) is for peace Lamachus appears in his gorgeous armour Dicaeopolis, under the affectation of extreme terror and simplicity, contrives to banter and provoke him Lamachus proceeds to violence, and is foiled, after which a dispute is carried on for some time between them upon equal terms, and they finally separate with a declaration of their respective determinations, the one looking forward to military achievement, and the other to commercial profit and enjoyment

It may be necessary to say something of an attempt that has been made in the translation of the following Chorus, to convey to the English reader some notion of the metrical character of the original. The Poet himself has described the metre as bold and manly, expressive of firmness and vehemence, and, as such, suitable to the persons of whom his Chorus is composed. The Cretic metre (for that is its name) consists of a quaver between two crotchets $(- \cup -)$, and may be considered as a truncated form of the Trochaic, differing from it only by the subtraction of a short or quaver-syllable; the Trochaic itself consisting of four syllables, a crotchet and quaver alternately $(- \cup - \cup)$. In consequence of this affinity, we find that the two metres frequently pass into each other

In the instance before Trochaic, but after to Cretic, the second quent occurrence in resolved into two the setween

Cnorns

Follow faster! all together! search, inquire of every one.

Speak, inform us, have you seen him? whither is the rascal run?

'Tis a point of public service that the traitor should be caught

In the fact, seized and arrested with the treaties that he brought.

SEMICBORUS I.

He's escaped, he's escaped—
Out upon it! Out upon it!—
Out of sight, out of search.
O the sad wearisome
Load of years!

Load of years!
Well do I remember such a burden as I bore Running with Phayllus! with a hamper at my back,

Out alack, Years ago

But, alas, my sixty winters and my sad rheumatic

Break my speed and spoil my running,—and that old unlucky sprain

He's escaped-

SEMICHORUS II.

But we'll pursue him Whether we be fast or slow, He shall learn to dread the peril of an old Acharnian foe.

O supreme Powers above, Merciful Father Jove.

¹ An eminent conqueror in the loot-race at Olympia. There was probably some story of his having been matched (under certain disadvantages) against an active man who had been used to run under a burthen

Oh the vile miscreant wretch.

How did he dare.

How did he presume in his unutterable villainy to make a peace.

Peace with the detestable abominable Spartan race.

No, the war must not end-

Never end-till the whole Spartan tribe

Are reduced, trampled down,

Tied and bound, hand and foot.

Chorus Now we must renew the search, pursuing at a steady pace

Soon or late we shall secure him, hunted down from place to place

Look about like eager marksmen, ready with your slings and stones

How I long to fall upon him, the villain, and to smash

Enter DICAEOPOLIS, his WIFE and DAUGHTER, a SLAVE. &c

Dro' Peace, peace Silence, silence.

CHORUS Stand aside! Keep out of sight! List to the sacrificial cries!

There he comes, the very fellow, going out to sacrifice. Wait and watch him for a minute, we shall have him

Dic Silence! move forward, the Canephora;

You Xanthias, follow close behind her there,
In a proper manner, with your pole and emblem
WIFE Set down the basket, daughter, and begin

DAUGHTER Give me the cruet, mother,

And let me pour it upon the holy cake
Dic Oh blessed Bacchus, what a joy it is To go thus unmolested, undisturb'd, My wife, my children, and my family, With our accustom'd, joyful ceremony, To celebrate thy festival in my farm

-Well, here's success to the truce of thirty years Mind your behaviour, child, carry the WIFE. basket

In a modest proper manner, look demure And grave, a happy fellow will he be That has the marrying of ye -Come, move on

Mind your gold truckets, they'll be stolen else
Dic. Follow behind there, Xanthias, with the pole,

And I'll strike up the bacchanalian chant.

-Wife, you must be spectator, go within, And mount to the housetop to behold us pass

DIG. (Sings)

Leader of the revel rout, Of the drunken roar and shout. Crazy mirth and saucy jesting, Frolie and intrigue clandestine! Half a dozon years are past,1 Here we meet in peace at last. All my wars and fights are o'er Other battles please me more,

With my neighbour's maid, the Thracian.

Found marauding in the wood, Seizing on the fair occasion,

With a quick retaliation Making an immediate booty Of her innocence and beauty -If a drunken head should ache. Bones and heads we never break If we quarrel over night, At a full carousing soak, In the morning all is right, And the shield hung out of sight

In the chimney smoke.

Chonus That's the man Mind your aim Polt away -- Pelt away

Dic. Heaven and Earth! what's here to do? You'll break the pitcher, have a care!

¹ This comedy was produced in 425 n c., the sixth year of the Peloponnesian war

CHOR. We'll break your head,

We'll break your bones,

We'll pummel you to death with stones.

Dic Tell me, most serene Acharnians, wherefore, upon what pretence?

Chor Impudence! Insolence! Infamous traitor, do ye dare to ask?

In despite

Of duty and right,-

Duty to the state.

Duty to the laws,— You've presumed to separate

Your private cause,

With the villamous abuse

Of a treasonable truce .

And you dare, Standing there.

Void of shame, void of grace.

To look us in the face

Dic. But my mctive-Once again, let me be heard, and I'll explain.

CHOR. No reply. You shall die,

Stoned and buried all at once,

Buried in a heap of stones.

Dio Have patience, do! forbear a bit!

You've never heard my reasons yet

We've forborne, long enough; Say no more. Trash and stuff! CHOR.

We detest you worse than Cleon, him that, if he gets his dues.

We shall cut up into thongs to serve the knights for straps and shoes

We'll not hear ye: your alliance with the worst of enemies,

With the wicked hated Spartans, we'll avenge it and chastise

Dic Don't be talking of the Spartans; 'tis another question wholly,

All my guilt or innocence depends upon the treaty solely.

Chor. Don't imagine to enjole us with your arguments and fetches

You confess you made a peace with those abominable wretches

Dic. Well, the very Spartans, even .- I've my doubts and scruples whether They've been totally to blame, in every instance, altogether Chor. Not to blame in every instance! Villain vagahond, how dare ye,

Talking treason to our faces, to suppose that we should spare ve

Dic Not so totally to blame, and I would show that, here and there.

The treatment they received from us has not been absolutely fair

Chor. What a scandal! what an insult! what an outrage on the state!

Are ye come to plead before us as the Spartans' advocate?

Dio I'm prepared to plead the cause, and bring my neck here for a pledge,

Placed upon the chopping block, ready to meet the axo's edge

CHOR. Don't be standing shilly shally, comrades. let the traitor die

Pummel him with stones to pieces, pound and maul him utterly.

Mash the villain to a jelly, like a vat of purple dye Drc. I'm astonish'd at your temper Won't you give me leave to say Something in my own defence, my good Acharnians? Hear me, pray!

CHOR. We're determin'd not to hear ye.

Dra That will be severe mdeed CHOR. We're determined.

Good Acharnians, give me Dra time and hear me plead.

CHOR. Death awaits you, death this instant. Dra Then the quick resolve is taken Know that I've secured a hostage destined to redeem my bacon.1

He, your homebred kindly kinsman, he with me shall live or perish.

CHOR What's the matter? Is there any child or infant that you cherish,

Missing here amongst you, neighbours, whom he keeps confined in durance?

What can else inspire the man with such a confident assurance?

Dic Strike, destroy me then, while I shall act in turn the assassin's part.

If the native love of charcoal moves not your obdu-[DICAEOPOLIS discovers a hamper of charcoal, and stands over it in a menacing theatrical attitude, with a sword drawn],

CHOR O forbear! see there!

See the poor natural Acharnian hamper of our own, Ready to be overthrown.

Spare it, I beseech thee, spare 2

Dro I'll not hear, the word is past Poor thing, this instant is its last

CHOR Spare it as our only joy,

Our solace and employ,

The staff of our declining years

Dic You, when I besought a hearing, arm'd your hands and shut your ears

CHOR Yes, but now we'll permit, We'll dispense, we'll allow

Your defence

1 The extravagant burlesque which follows, turns upon the occupation of the Acharmans as charcoal-burners

A burlesque of some scene in a contemporary tragedy in which the actors were 'brought to a deadlock'—It should seem as if, in the original here parodied, the assailants had been kept at bay by the counter-menace of destroying some royal of chargool. In one of the augusted the substitute of a hamper of charcoal. In one of the existing tragedies of Euripides there is an instance of a deadlock quite as decided as the one which Our beloved Darling is at stake.

We submit

Wholly for his sake.

Dic. Before we parley or compound, cast mo those pebbles to the ground

CHOR. See there, all's fair

But keen your word, sheatho the sword

Dic. Other pebbles may be lurking in the lappets

of the jerkin

CHOR. Novor fear, never doubt. Soe them here shaken out There's none behind only mind. Keep your word, sheathe the sword. And here I fling stone and shing, Sling and stone, both away,

Both in one, both are gone

Dic Well now, will you please to have done with your noise and nonsenso, And fling them away, too, both Fine work you've made. A pretty business! Look there at your hamper What a taking the poor oreature has been in, Voiding its coal-dust, like a outtle fish, For very fright, nearly destroy'd in short, Merely from a want of temper and discretion On the part of its own friends 1 'Tis passing strange, That human nature should be so possest With a propensity to pelt and bawl, When gentle easy Reason might decide All their debates with order, peace, and law, When I myself stand here resign'd, and ready To plead my cause before a chopping block,

To vindicate the Spartans and myself Yet I, forsooth, can feel the fear of death. And hold my life as dear as others do

CHOR. Bring the block! Bring it here! Rogue, for I long to hear Speedily whatever you can have to say

Speak away

¹ Parody of the rhetorical style of Euripides

SEMICHORUS

'Twas your own choice, your own appointed pledge Bring forth the chopping-block, and speak away Dic Well, there it is See, there's the choppingblock!

And little I myself am the defendant. Depend upon it, I'll fight manfully I'll never hug myself within my shield, I'll speak my mind, moreover, about the Spartans. And vet forsooth a secret anxious fear Appals me, for I know the turn and temper Of rustic natures, then delighted most When from some bold declaimer, right or wrong, They hear their country's praises and their own; Delighted, but deluded all the while. Unconsciously bamboozled and befool'd And well I know the minds of aged men, And the malignant pleasure that they feel In a harsh verdict or an angry vote And well I recollect my sufferings past From Cleon, for my comedy last year, 1 And how he dragged me to the senate house, And trod me down, and bellow'd over me, And lick'd me with the rough side of his tongue; And maul'd me, till I scarce escaped alive. All batter'd and bespatter'd and befoul'd Permit me, therefore, first to clothe myself In a pathetical and heart-rending dress

CHOR It's no use! mere excuse!

Mere pretence!
Take what you will for your defence,
Anything you think of use,
Even the invisible huge hobgoblin helmet
Of the learned Hieronymus, if you choose.

I care not, I, You may try

1 The Babylonians

A lyrical and tragic poet particularly studious of the terrific.

The tricks and turns of Sisyphus in the play, 1 We grant free leave for all, but no delay

Dic. Well, I must try then to keep up my spirits, And trudge away to find Euripides.

Holloa!

SERVANT Who's there?

Dic Euripides within ? SERV Within, yet not within. You comprehend me?

DIC. Within and not within! why, what do ye mean?

SERV I speak correctly, old Sire! his outward man Is in the garret writing tragedy,

While his essential being is abroad,

Pursuing whimsies in the world of fancy

Dic O happy Euripides, with such a servant. So clever and accomplish'd 1-call him out.

SERV It's quite impossible

Dia But it must be done. Positively and absolutely I must see him,

Or I must stand here, rapping at the door Euripides! Euripides! come down, If ever you came down in all your life! "Tis I, 'tis Dicaeopolis from Chollidae"

EUR. I'm not at lessure to come down.

Dia. Perhaps-But here's the scene shifter can wheel you round.

EUR. It cannot be

But however, notwithstanding DIG. EUR. Well, there then, I'm wheel'd round, for I had not time

For coming down

Europides, I say! Dig.

EUR. What say yo?

Europides! Europides!

¹ This play is lost, but Sisyphus had been represented in old poetic legends as so artful a person, that he had persuaded Proserpine to consent to his release from the infernal regions 2 A mark of rusticity Dicaeopolis mentions his demus in addition to his name

Good lawk, you're there ' upstairs ' you write upstairs, Instead of the ground floor? always upstairs Well, now, that's odd! But, dear Euripides, If you had but a suit of rags that you could lend me You're he that brings out cripples in your tragedies; A'nt ve? You're the new Poet, he that writes Those characters of beggars and blind people Well, dear Euripides, if you could but lend me A suit of tatters from a cast-off tragedy. For mercy's sake, for I'm obliged to make A speech in my own defence before the chorus, A long pathetic speech this very day, And if it fails, the doom of death betides me

EUR. Say, what do ye seek? is it the woful garb

In which the wretched aged Oeneus acted?

No. 'twas a wretcheder man than Oeneus, Drc much 1

EUR Was it blind Phoenix?

Dic No. not Phoenix, no.

A fellow a great deal wretcheder than Phoenix.

EUR I wonder what he wants, is it the rags
Which Philoctetes went a begging with?
Dic No, 'twas a beggar worse than Philoctetes Eur Say, would you wish to wear those loathly weeds.

The habiliments of lame Bellerophon? Drc 'Twas not Bellerophon, but very like him.

A kind of smooth, fine-spoken character, A beggar into the bargain and a cripple,

With a grand command of words, bothering and begging. EUR. I know your man, 'tis Telephus the Mysian. Dic Ah, Telephus — Yes, Telephus do, pray, Give me the things he wore.

EUR. Go fetch them there You'll find 'em next to the tatters of Thyestes, Just over Ino's Take them, there, and welcome

¹ This and the names which follow refer to personages in those dramas of Euripides in which his object had been (what in poetry, as in real life, is the meanest of all), to excite compassion

Dic. O Jupiter, what an infinite endless mass Of eternal holes and patches! Here it is, Here's wherewithal to clothe myself in misery Euripides, now, since you've gone so far, Do give me the other articles besides Belonging to these rags, that suit with thom, With a little Mysian bonnet for my head For I must wear a beggar's garb to day, Yet be myself in spite of my disguise, That the audience all may know me, but the chorus, Poor creatures, must not have the least suspicion Whilst I cajole them with my rhetoric.

EUR. I'll give it you, your scheme is excellent, Deep, subtle, natural, a profound device to 'May the Heavens reward you, and as to Telephus, 1

'May they decide his destiny as I wish!'
Why, bless me, I'm quite inspired (I think) with phrases

I shall want the beggar's staff, though, notwithstanding EUR. Here, take it, and depart forth from the palace

O my poor heart! much hardship hast thou

And must abide new sorrows even now, Driven hence in want of various articles. Subdue thy nature to necessity, Be supple, smooth, importunate, and bend Thy temper to the level of thy fortune -Yet grant me another boon, Euripides, A little tiny basket let it be,

One that has held a lamp, all burnt and batter'd.

EUR. Why should you need it?

'Tis no need, perhaps, But strong desire, a longing eager wish EUR. You're troublesome Depart.

1 In the play which is here burlesqued, Telephus had been speaking in an assumed character, and had appeared with a similar ambiguous form, to be imprecating evil upon himself. himself

Alas, alas! Drg. Yet may you prosper like your noble mother.1

EUR. Depart, I sav

Don't say so! Give me first, Drc First give me a pipkin broken at the brim Eur You're troublesome in the mansion. Take it, go!

Dic Alas, you know not what I feel, Euripides.

Yet grant me a pitcher, good Euripides;
A pitcher with a sponge plugg'd in its mouth.
Eur Fellow, you'll plunder me a whole tragedy.

Take it, and go.

Yes, aye forsooth, I'm going. Dic But how shall I contrive? There's something more That makes or mars my fortune utterly, Yet give them, and bid me go, my dear Euripides; A little bundle of leaves to line my basket EUR For mercy's sake! . . But take them There

they go

My tragedies and all! ruin'd and robb'd! Dic No more I mean to trouble you, no more. Yes, I retire, in truth I feel myself Importunate, intruding on the presence Of chiefs and princes, odious and unwelcome. But out, alas, that I should so forget The very point on which my fortune turns; I wish I may be hang'd, my dear Euripides, If ever I trouble you for anything. Except one little, little, little boon, A single lettuce from your mother's stall.

Eur This stranger taunts us Close the palace gate

Drc. O my poor soul, endure it and depart, And take thy sorrowful leave, without a lettuce Yet, know'st thou yet the race which must be run, Pleading the cause of Sparta: and here you stand Even at the goal, time urges, arm yourself! Infuse the spirit of Euripides, His quirks and quibbles, in thine immost heart!

¹ His mother was of very low condition See below, 1 585.

'Tis well. Now forward, even to the place Where thou must pledge thy life, and plead the cause As may befall thee. Forward, forward yet, A little more I'm dreadfully out of spirits

SEMICHORUS II.1

Speak, or are ye dumb,
Thou rogue in grain,
Iron brain!
Heart of stone!
Villain, are ye come,
Venturing your head alone,
Singly to support a treason of your own

SEMICHORUS L.

Hc's resolved,
Confident,
Firm in his intent,
Ready to the day
—Well, my man l
Since that's your plan,
Speak away!

[In the following lines there is an Intentional imitation of the dry drawling style of Euripides' harangues]

Dro. Be not surprised, most excellent spectators, If I that am a beggar have presumed To claim an audience upon public matters, Even in a comedy, for comedy Is conversant in all the rules of justice, And can distinguish betweet right and wrong

The words I speak are bold, but just and true Cleon, at least, cannot accuse me now, That I defame the city before strangers. For this is the Lenacan festival, And here we meet, all by ourselves alone, No deputies are arrived as yet with tribute,

¹ See above, p 15, for the characters of the two Semichoruses

No strangers or allies, but here sit we A chosen sample, clean as sifted corn, With our own denizens as a kind of chaff.

First, I detest the Spartans most extremely; And wish, that Neptune, the Taenarian deity, Would bury them in their houses with his earthquakes.

For Î've had losses—losses, let me tell ye,
Like other people, vines cut down and injured.
But, among friends (for only friends are here),
Why should we blame the Spartans for all this?
For people of ours, some people of our own,
Some people from amongst us here, I mean;
But not the people (pray remember that);
I never said the people,—but a pack
Of paltry people, mere pretended citizens,
Base counterfeits, went laying informations,
And making a confiscation of the jerkins
Imported here from Megara; pigs moreover,
Pumpkins, and pecks of salt, and ropes of onions,
Were voted to be merchandise from Megara,
Denounced, and seized, and sold upon the spot.

Well, these might pass, as petty local matters. But now, behold, some doughty drunken youths Kidnap, and carry away from Megara, The courtesan Simaetha Those of Megara, In hot retaliation, seize a brace Of equal strumpets, hurried force perforce From Dame Aspasia's house of recreation. So this was the beginning of the war, All over Greece, owing to these three strumpets For Pericles, like an Olympian Jove, With all his thunder and his thunderbolts, Began to storm and lighten dreadfully, Alarming all the neighbourhood of Greece; And made decrees, drawn up like drinking songs, In which it was enacted and concluded, That the Megarians should remain excluded From every place where commerce was transacted. With all their ware—like 'old care'—in the ballad:

And this decree, by land and sea, was valid. Then the Megarians, being all half starved, Desired the Spartans, to desire of us, Just to repeal those laws, the laws I mention d, Occasion'd by the stealing of those strumpets And so they begg'd and pray'd us several times, And we refused, and so they went to war You'll say, 'They should not' Why, what should they have done?

Just make it your own case, suppose the Spartans Had mann'd a boat, and landed on your islands, And stolen a pug puppy from Seriphos, Would you then have remain'd at home inglorious? Not so, by no means, at the first report, You would have launch'd at once three hundred gallevs.

And fill'd the city with the noise of troops, And crews of ships, crowding and clamouring About the muster-masters and pay masters, With measuring corn out at the magazine, And all the porch choked with the multitude, With figures of Minerva, newly furbish'd, Painted and gilt, parading in the streets, With wineskins, kegs, and firkins, leeks and onions, With garlie cramm'd in pouches, nets, and pokes, With garlands, singing girls, and bloody noses Our arsenal would have sounded and resounded With bangs and thwacks of driving bolts and nails, With shaping oars and holes to put the oar m, With hacking, hammering, clattering and boring, Words of command, whistles and pipes and fifes.

Such would have been your conduct. Will you

88V,

'That Telephus should have acted otherwise?'
2 SEMICHOR. Really! IS It come to that? You rogue, how dare ye,

A beggar, here to come abusing us,

The rimes in the text are intentional The Scholiast tells us that the original contains an allusion to the words of a well known drinking song

Slandering us all, inveighing against informers?

1 SEMICH. By Jove, but it's all true; truth, every word,

All true, not aggravated in the least.

2 Semich. And if it is, what right has he to say so?

None in the world; and he shall suffer for it.

1 Semich Hands off there! what are ye after? Leave him go!

I'll grapple ye else, and heave ye neck and crop.

2 SEMICH Lamachus! Lamachus!

Lamachus arise!

Let the gaze, Of thine eyes, In a blaze,

Daunt and amaze

Thine enemies. Bring along

All the throng,

Hardy comrades, bold and strong, For assault or standing fight, Hasten and assist the right

LAMAOHUS Whence came that noise of battle on mine ears?

Where am I summon'd? whither must I rush? To the rescue or assault? what angry shout Rouses the slumbering Gorgon on my shield?

Dio O Lamachus, with your glorious crests and conquests !

2 SEMICH. O Lamachus! if there an't this fellow here

Abusing us and all the state this long while!

LAM. How dare ye, sirrah, a beggar, to talk thus?

Dic. O mighty Lamachus, have mercy upon me,

If, being a beggar, I prated and spoke amiss

Lam. What were your words? repeat them, can't ye?

Dic I can't.

I can't remember; I'm so terrified.
The terror of that crest quite turn'd me dizzy;

Do take the hobgoblin away from me, I beseech you

LAM. There then Drc.

Now turn it upside down LAM

See there Die Now give me one of the feathers

LASE Here, this plume

Take it.

Dic. Now clasp your hands across my forchead, For I feel that I shall strain in vomiting

Those crests turn'd me so sick

LAM What are you doing? You variet, would you use my plume for a vomit?

Dic. A plume, do you call it? What does it belong to?

LAM fo a bird-

To a cock lorrel, does it not? Dic LAM Ah, you shall dio [A scuffle, in which LAMA CHUS 18 Toiled

No. Lamachus not so fast. DIC. That's rather a point above you, stout as you are.

LAM. Is this the sort of language for a beggar

To use to a commander such as me?

Dic. A beggar am I? Why, what elso are you? LAM. Drc. I'll tell ye! an honest man, that's what I am A citizen that has served his time in the army,

As a footsoldier, fairly, not like you,
Pilfering, and drawing pay, with a pack of foreigners.

Lam They voted me a command Drc. Who voted it

DIC.

A pareel of ouckoos! Well, I've made my peace.
In short, I could not abide the thing, not I,
To soo grey headed men serve in the ranks,
And lads like you dispatch'd upon commissions,
Some skulking away to Thrace, with their three draohmas,

Tisamenus's, Chares's and Geres's, Cheats, coxcombs, vagabonds, and Phaemppus's, And Theodorus's sent off to Gela,¹

1 The Scholiast mentions all these persons as disreputable ARISTOPHANES

And Catana, and Camarina, and the Catamountains.

Lam It pass'd by a vote

DIC. But what's the reason, pray,

For you to be sent out with salaries always, And none of these good people? You, Marilades, Have you been ever sent on an embassy?

You're old enough He shakes his head Not he! Yet he's a hardworking steady sober man And you, Euphorides, Prinides, and the rest,

Have you ever been out into Chaonia,

Or up to Echatana?—no, not one of ye. But Megacles, and Lamachus, and suchlike,

That, with their debts and payments long since due,2

Have heard their friends insisting and repeating, 'Get off', 'Keep out of the way', like the huswife's

That empties a nuisance into the street at night LAM And must we bear all this,—in the name of democracy?

Yes, just as long as Lamachus draws his

LAM. No matter! Henceforth I devote myself Against the Peloponuesians, whilst I live,

To assault and harass them by land and sea

Die And I proclaim for all the Peloponnesians And Thebans and Megarians, a free market, Where they may trade with me, but not with Lamachus

The Parabasis, in which the Chorus was brought forward to speak in praise or defence of the author, was a portion of the primitive satyrical undramatic comedy times of the ancient or (as we should call it, from the name of the only author whose remains have reached us) the Aristophanic comedy, it seems to have been regarded as nearly superfluous, and is seldom introduced without some alleged motive, as in the instance before us, sometimes a burlesque one, as in the Peace

² Monthly payments to their club

intriguers The Athenians were already extending their views to Sicily

¹ Names allusive to their occupation as charcoal burners

The present, which is the oldest of the existing plays of Aristophianes, was as he tells us, the first in which he had introduced a Parabasis. Since his alleged, and probably his real, motive was the circumstance to which he had already alluded when speaking in the assumed character of Diencopolis he had reverted to his sufferings past,

From Cleon for my comedy last year p 24

This coincidy (the Babylonians) scenis, as far as we can judge of it from the few fragments that remain, to have been intended, in the first place, as an exposure of existing malpractices and abuses, and, secondly, as a reductio adaburdum of the extravagant schemes of Athenian ambition assuming them to be realized, and exhibiting

the result

The progressive aggrandizement of Athens had been marked, from the beginning, by the extertion and oppression practised (with a few honourable exceptions) by her military commanders, Themistocles himself having set the In process of time, as the inferior allied states became gradually subject to the more immediate dominion of Atliens, they became exposed to the additional pest of professional informers and venal demagogues, subsisting or onriching themselves by extortion and bribery This state of things, odious and offensive to the whole Grecian race, diagraceful to the Athenian people, and profitable only to the most worthless and unprincipled among them, was the final unsatisfactory result of their vast offorts and indefatigable setivity during two generations the consummation of the ambitious projects of the most able statesmen of a former age Meanwhile, at the time when this play (the Babylonians) was produced, the same scandals and abuses continued to be perpetrated in the subject states, under the covor of the Athenian supremacy, · while the avidity for further conquest and dominion still remained predominant in the minds of the Athenian people

The Post then, in the fervour of youthful patriotism, and the pride of conscious genius; not as he was soon afterwards tempted to hecome and to constitute himself, a professional playwright, the poetical serf of the community, 1 but with the option of active life still open

¹ These inferences are distinctly deducible from the Parabasis of the Knights

before him, comparatively therefore independent of his audience, and confident in his own wit and courage as a defence against the resentment of the most powerful opponents; had ventured an appeal to the Athenian people against their whole system of imperial policy both internal and external, against the grievances which they authorized or overlooked, and against their insatiable avidity for empire, tending, if attainable, in its unavoidable results, to the wider extension and aggravation of a system of abuses disgraceful to the name and character of the Athenian people

With this view therefore, taking for his canvas an imaginary empire, extending to the furthest limits to which the wildest ambition of his countrymen would have aspired, he had transferred to its remote localities the practices of the most notorious Athenian characters, and the most flagrant instances of existing oppression and corruption. The demagogues and informers of Athens (under this supposed unlimited extension of Athenian supremacy) were represented as transacting business on a larger scale, and extending to the richest and most distant regions of the East the practices which had hitherto been limited to the Islands of the Archipelago and the shores of Asia Minor

The Poet, however, must have been aware, that he had undertaken a task of extreme difficulty and hazard, one in which, more than in any other theatrical attempt, it was necessary for him, at the first outset, to secure the sympathy of his audience, or, more properly speaking, to excite an antipathy against the objects of his attack, similar to that by which he himself was animated It seems probable, therefore, that the order of subjects in the comedy must have been the same as that which is observable in the Parabasis which follows, and which may be considered as an apologetical analysis of the preceding play It had begun then with the least criminal perhaps, but to the feelings of the Athenians the most invidious and irritating topic of accusation, namely, the occasional instances of undue advantages obtained for a subject state, by the hired agency of Athenian statesmen and orators, co-operating with the panegyrical capolery of its deputies and envoys. A fragment has been preserved, evidently belonging to what was called a 'long rhesis', a narrative speech, in which a character of this kind is making a triumphant report to his eniployers, describing his success in captivating the attention of an Athenian auditory, and giving a ridiculous picture of the effect which his oratory had produced upon them.

> Then every soul of them sat openmouth'd, Like reasted eviters, caping in a row!

But the general plan of the play must have included a picture of the abuses and insolence, under which the subject states were suffering an oxhibition of the processes of extertion and intimidation which were practised upon them, an exposure of the persons most notoriously guilty of such practices, and probably also of some flagrant instances which were known to have occurred, and which might have been represented on the stage with no other disguise than that of a remote fanciful locality assigned to them in the new imaginary universal Empire of the

Athenian Commonwealth

This must have been the service, which, as he says, had excited the grateful feelings of the subject states, and their just admiration of the courage of the man 'who had risked the persions enterprise of pleading in bohalf of justice, in presence of an Athenian auditory' It is observable that the Poet, after having, with a just feeling of pride and self-estimation, ventured in this way to assort his own merits, immediately after, as if alarmed at his own beldness (like Rabelais or the jesters in Shakespeare. when they are apprehensive of having touched upon too tender a point) makes a sudden escape from the subject. and hurries off into a strain of transcendental nonsense. about the high consideration with which his character and scrvices to the country were regarded by the Persian monarch, and how the Spartans insisted upon obtaining the island of Aegina, from no other motive, than a wish to deprive the Athenians of the advantage which they might derive from his poetlcal admonitions

¹ Ap Athen., p 86 Compare this with Knights, L 651, and the whole passage to which it belongs

PARABASIS OF THE CHORUS

Our poet has never as yet Esteem'd it proper oi lit, To detain you with a long Encomiastic song, On his own superior wit But being abused and accused. And attack'd of late. As a foe to the state. He makes an appeal in his proper defence To your voluble humour and temper and sense, With the following rlea.

Namely that he Never attempted or ever meant

To scandalize

In any wise

Your mighty imperial government.

Moreover he says.

That in various ways

He presumes to have merited honour and praise, Exhorting you still to stick to your rights. And no more to be fool'd with rhetorical flights;

Such as of late each envoy tries On the behalf of your allies, That come to plead their cause before ye, With fulsome phrase, and a foolish story Of violet crowns, and Athenian glory,

With sumptuous Athens at every word; Sumptuous Athens is always heard, Sumptuous ever, a suitable phrase

For a dish of meat or a beast at graze

He therefore affirms. In confident terms.

That his active courage and earnest zeal Have usefully served your common weal:

He has openly shown The style and tone

Of your democracy ruling abroad

He has placed its practices on record, The tyrannical arts, the knavish tricks, That poison all your politics

Therefore we shall see, this year,
The allies with tribute arriving here,
Eager and anxious all to behold
Their steady protector, the bard so bold
The bard, they say, that has dared to speak,
To attack the strong, to defend the weak.

His fame in foreign climes is heard, And a singular instance lately occurr'd It occurr'd in the case of the Persian king, Sifting and cross examining The Spartan envoys He demanded Which of the rival states commanded The Grecian seas? He ask'd them next. (Wishing to see them more perplext,) Which of the two contending powers Was chiefly abused by this bard of ours? For he said, 'Such a bold, so profound an adviser By dint of abuse would render them wiscr. More active and able, and briefly that they Must finally prosper and carry the day' Now mark the Lacedaemonian guile ! Demanding an insignificant isle 'Aegma,' they say, 'for a pledge of peace, 'As a means to make all jealousy cease' Meanwhile their privy design and plan Is solely to gain this marvellous man,-Knowing his influence on your fate -By obtaining a bold on his estate Situate in the isle aforesaid Therefore there needs to be no more said You know their intention, and know that you know it. You'll keep to your island, and stick to the poet. And he for his part Will practise his art With a patriot heart, With the honest views

That he now pursues

And fair buffoonery and abuse, Not rashly hespattering, or basely befinttering, Not pimping, or puffing, or acting the ruffian; Not sneaking or fawning;

But openly scorning All menace and warning, All bribes and suborning:

He will do his endeavour on your behalf;

He will teach you to think, he will teach you to

So Cleon again and again may try, I value him not, nor fear him, I! His rage and rhetoric I defy. His impudence, his politics, His dirty designs, his rascally tricks No stain of abuse on me shall fix Justice and right, in his despite, Shall aid and attend me, and do me right: With these to friend, I ne'er will bend, Nor descend To an humble tone (Like his own), As a sneaking loon, A knavish, slavish, poor poltroon.

STROPHE.

Muse of old Manly times, Strike the bold Hearty rimes. New revived, Firm, energetical Music of Acharnae, Choleric, fiery, quick, As the sparkle From the charcoal, Of the native evergreen Knotted oak, In the smoke

Shows his active fiery spleen. Whilst beside Stands the dish Full of fish Ready to be fried Fverv face, in the place, Overlov'd, all emplov'd. Junketing apace Muse then, as a friend of all. Hasten, and attend the call. Give an ear To your old, Lusty, bold Townsmen here.

EPIRRHEMA.

We, the veterans of the city, briefly must expostulate At the hard ungrateful usage which we meet with from the state.

Suffering men of years and service at your bar to stand indicted.

Bullied by your beardless speakers, worried and per plex'd and frighted,

Aided only by their staff, the staff on which their steps are stay'd,

Old, and impotent, and empty, deaf, decrepit, and decav'd.

There they stand, and pore, and drivel, with a misty purblind gleam Scarce discerning the tribunal, in a kind of waking dream.

Then the stripling, their accuser, fresh from training bold and quick

Pleads in person, fencing, sparring using every turn and trick,

Grappling with the feeble culprit, dragging him to dangerous ground,

Into pitfalls of dilemmas, to perplex him and confound.

Then the wretched invalid attempts an answer, and at last

After stammering and mumbling, goes away condemn'd and east;

Moaning to his friends and neighbours, 'All the little store I have,

'All is gone! my purchase-money for a coffin and my

ANTISTROPHE

Scandalous and a shame it is, Seen or told. Scandalous and a shame to see. A warrior old: Crippled in the war, Worried at the bar; Him, the veteran, that of old Firmly stood, With a fierce and hardy frown, In the field of Marathon; Running down Sweat and blood There and then, we were men; Valorous assailants; now Poor and low, Open and exposed to wrong, From the young,

Every knave, every ass,
Every rogue like Marpsyas!

The Thucydides mentioned in the following lines is not the historian (the son of Olorus); but a much older man, and in his time of much greater personal eminence. In the scanty historical notices which have reached us respecting the period in which he lived, he is distinguished from others of the same name, as the son of Milesius, and it should seem that he must have succeeded to Cimon, as the leader

¹ Not known in history, but said by the Scholiast to have been noted by the contemporary comic poets as a troublesome contentious orator of an unavailing opposition to that system of innevation in demestic and foreign policy which Pericles introduced and by which he secured for himself, at the expense of posterity, a life annuity of power and popularity

A very characteristic anecdote is alluded to in the 7th and 5th lines Thucydides had been asked 'which of the two (himself or Pericles) was the best wrestler', (i e the best debater) To which he answered 'I am the best wrestler but when I have flung him, he starts up again and persuades the people that he was not thrown down '

ANTEPIRRHEMA

Shame and grief it was to witness poor Thucydides's fate.

Indicted by Cephisodemus ', overwhelm'd with words

and prate

I myself when I beheld him, an old statesman of the Dragg'd and held by Seythian archers *, I was moved to tears and pity,

Him that I remember once tremendous, terrible, and Discomfiting the Seythian host, subduing the revolted crowd.

Undaunted, desperate, and bold, that with his hasty grasp could fling

A dozen, in as many easts, of the best wrestlers in the ring

Three thousand archers of the guard, he bawl'd and roar'd and bore them down

No living soul he fear'd or spared, or friends or kinsmen of his own

An orator famous, or rather unfamous, as a bold and dangerous accuser

gerous accuser

These were purchased slaves, the property of the state, employed by the magistrates as a police-guard see Them 1 1001

They were also employed to maintain order in the public assembly, and to force disorderly speakers to descend from the bema. This part of their duties is alluded to elsewhere see Eccles 1 143, 258

1

Since you then refuse to suffer aged men to rest in pence,

Range your criminals in classes, let the present method

cease

Give up elderly delinquents to be mumbled, mouth'd, and wrung

By the toothless old accusers; but protect them from the young

For the younger class of culprits young accusers will be fair.

Prating prostituted fops, and Clinias's son and heir Thus we may proceed in order, all of us, with all our might,

Severally, both youths and elders, to defend and to indict

DICAEOPOLIS

Well, there's the boundary of my market place, Mark'd out, for the Peloponnesians and Boeotians And the Megarians All are freely welcome

To traffic and sell with me, but not with Lamachus

Moreover I've appointed constables,

With lawful and sufficient straps and thongs, To keep the peace, and to coerce and punish All spies and vagabonds and informing people.

Come, now for the column, with the terms of peace

Inscribed upon it! I must fetch it out,

And fix it here in the centre of my market

A writer in the Quarterly Review for July, 1820 (not a very different person from the writer of this note) adduces the two scenes immediately following, as instances, amongst others, of that tendency to generalization which, as he contends, was no less predominant in the mind of Aristo-

phanes than in that of Shakespeare

In reference to this principle it is observed of the following scenes that 'the two country people who are introduced as attending Dicaeopolis's market, are not merely a Megarian and a Theban distinguished by a difference of dialect and behaviour, they are the two extremes of rustic character-the one (the Megarian) depressed by indigence into meanness, is shifting and selfish, with habits of coarse fraud and vulgar jocularity The Theban is the direct opposite—a primitive, hearty, frank, uu suspicious, easy-midded fellow, be comes to market with bis followers, in a kind of old-fashioued rustic triumph, with his bag-pipers attending him Dicaeopolis (the Atheusan, the medium between the two extremes before described) immediately exhibits his superior refinement by suppressing their minstrelsy and the honest Theban instead of being offended, joins in condemning them. He then displays his wares, and the Atbeniau, with a burlesque tragical raut, takes one of bis best articles (a Copaic eel) and delivers it to his own attendants to be conveyed within doors. The Theban, with great simplicity, asks how he is to be paid for it, and the Athemau, in a tone of grave superiority, but with some awkwardness, informs bim that he claims it as a toll die to the market The Theban does not remonstrate, but after some conversation agrees to dispose of all his wares, and to take other goods in return, but here a difficulty arises, for the same articles which the Atheusan proposes m exchauge, happen to be equally abundant in Bocotia. The scene here passes into burlesque, but it is a burlesque expressive of the character which is assigned to the Thebau a character of primitive simplicity, utterly unacquainted with all the pests by which existence was poisoued in the corrupt community of Atbeus. A commou sycophant or informer is proposed as an article which the Athenian soil produced in great ahundance, but which would be considered as a rarity in Bosotia. The Theban agrees to the exchange, saying, that if he could get such an animal to take home, he thinks he could make a handsome profit hy exhibiting him.'

The scene which immediately follows (that of the Megarian) has been slightly modified, without detriment, it must be hoped, to the genuine bumour of the original perhaps even with advantage since the attention of the English reader is not distracted by that strange contrast of ancient and modern manners, which strikes the reader of the original with an impression, wholly disproportionate to the intention of the Author, and destructive of that general harmouy and breadth of effect which he had intended to produce, and which, as far as his contemporaries were concerned.

he had succeeded in producing

Enter a MEGARIAN with his two little girls.

MEG Ah, there's the Athenian market! Heaven bless it,

I say, the welcomest sight to a Megarian
I've look'd for it, and long'd for it, like a child
For its own mother. You, my daughters dear,
Disastrous offspring of a dismal sire,
List to my words, and let them sink impress'd
Upon your empty stomachs, now's the time
That you must seek a livelihood for yourselves
Therefore resolve at once, and answer me,
Will you be sold abroad, or starve at home?

BOTH. Let us be sold, page 1. Let us be sold.

BOTH Let us be sold, papa!—Let us be sold MEG I say so too, but who do ye think will purchase

Such useless mischievous commodities?

However, I have a notion of my own,
A true Megarian's scheme,—I mean to sell ye
Disguised as pigs, with artificial pettitoes
Here, take them, and put them on Remember now,
Show yourselves off, do credit to your breeding,
Like decent pigs, or else, by Mercury,
If I'm obliged to take you back to Megara,
There you shall starve, far worse than heretofore
—This pair of masks too—fasten 'em on your faces,
And crawl into the sack there on the ground.
Mind ye—Remember—you must squeak and whine,
And racket about like little roasting pigs
—And I'll call out for Dicaeopolis
Hoh Dicaeopolis, Dicaeopolis!

I say, would you please to buy some pigs of mine?
Dic What's there? a Megarian?
Meg (sneakingly)

Yes—we're come to market

¹ The Athenians could not claim the invention of comedy, which belonged to the Megarians they therefore indemnified themselves by decrying the humour of the Megarians, as low

Dic. How goes it with you? Mra We're all like to starve Well, liking is everything. If you have your Dic.

That's all in all the likeness is a good one. A pretty likeness! like to starve, you say

But what else are you doing !

MEG What we're doing '

I left our governing people all contriving To ruin us utterly without loss of time

Dic It's the only way it will keep you out of mischief

Meddling and getting into scrapes

MEG Ave. yes

Dic. Well what's your other news ! llow's corn ?

What price?

MEG Corn? it's above all price, we worship it. Dic. But salt? You've salt I reckon—

Salt ? how should ne? MEG

Have not you seized the salt panse?

No ' nor garlie ?

Have ye not garlie? What do ye talk of garlie?

As if you had not wasted and destroy'd it,

And grubb'd the very roots out of the ground
Dic. Well, what have you got then? Tell us! Can't ve !

MEG (in the tone of a sturdy resolute lie.) Pigs,-

Pigs truly-pigs forsooth, for sacrifice That's well, let's look at 'em Dro

Aye, they're handsome ones, MEG You may feel how heavy they are, if ye hold 'em up Dio Hey day! What's this? What's here? MEG A pig, to be sure Dio Do ye say so? Where does it come from?

MEO Come? from Megara

What, an't it a pig?

No truly, it does not seem so Dro. Did you ever hear the like? Such an unac-Meg countable

Suspicious fellow! it is not a pig, he says! But I'll be judged; I'll bet ye a bushel of salt,

It's what we call a natural proper pig.

Dio Perhaps it may, but it's a human pig.

Meg. Human! I'm human; and they're mine,

Whose should they be, do ye think? so far they're

But come, will you hear 'em squeak?

With all my heart. Aye, yes, by Jove,

Come now, pig! now's the time:

Remember what I told ye—squeak directly!
Squeak, can't ye! Curse ye, what's the matter

Squeak when I bid you, I say; by Mercury I'll carry you back to Megara if you don't. DAUGHTER. Wee wee

MEG Do ye hear the pig? Dic

The pig, do ye call it?

It will be a different creature before long.

MEG It will take after the mother, like enough Dic. Aye, but this pig won't do for sacrifice MEG Why not? why won't it do for sacrifice?

Imperfect! here's no tail!

 M_{EG} It will have a tail in time, like all the rest. Poh, never mind,

But feel this other, just the fellow to it, With a little further keeping, it would serve

For a pretty dainty sacrifice to Venus
Dic You warrant 'em wean'd ? they'll feed without

MEG Without the mother or the father either.

Dic But what do they like to eat?

You may ask 'em if you will. Just what ye give 'em,

1 DAUGHT.

Pig, pig! Wee wée.

Drc Pig, are ye fond of peas? 1 DAUGHT.

Wee wée wee wée.

Dic. Are ye fond of figs?

1 DAUGHT Wee wee wee wee wee wee. Dic You little one, are you fond of figs ?

2 DAUGHT

Dic. What a squeak was there! they're ravenous for the figs

Go somebody, fetch out a parcel of figs For the little pigs! Heh, what, they'll eat, I warrant. Lawk there, look at 'em racketing and bustling! How they do munch and crunch! in the name of heaven.

Why, sure they can't have eaten 'em already! MEG (sneakingly) Not all, there's this one here. I took myself

Well, faith, they're elever comical animals. What shall I give you for 'em? What do ye ask?
Meg I must have a gross of onions for this here,

And the other you may take for a peck of salt. Dic. I'll keep 'em . wait a moment.

Heaven be praised! MEG O blessed Mercury, if I could but manage To make such another bargain for my wife, I'd do it to morrow, or my mother either

Enter INFORMER.

INF Fellow, from whence?

MEG From Megara with my pigs INF Then I denounce your pigs, and you yourself. As belonging to the enemy

MEG

There it is! The beginning ' of all our troubles over again. INF I'll teach you to come Megarizing here

Let go of the sack there

MEG Dicaeopolis ! Hoh, Dicaeopolis! there's a fellow here

Denouncing me Dig.

Denouncing is he? Constables, Why don't you keep the market clear of sycophants? You fellow, I must inform ye, your informing Is wholly illegal and informal here.

INF. What, giving information against the enemy:

Is that prohibited?

Dic At your peril! Carry Your informations to some other market.

MEG What a plague it is at Athens, this informing!

Dic O never fear, Megarian, take it there. The payment for your pigs, the salt and onions:

And fare you well

MEG That's not the fashion amongst us.

We've not been used to faring well

Dic. No matter.

If it's offensive, I'll revoke the wish;

And imprecate it on myself instead [Exit

Meg. There now, my little pigs, you must contrive To munch your bread with salt, if you can get it.

[Exit

The following song consists merely of a satirical enumeration and description of persons, now, for the most part, entirely forgotten. An attempt has therefore been made to give some interest to it (an interest of curiosity at least) by a close imitation of the metre of the original. The Cratinus here mentioned is not the celebrated comic author, but a contemporary lyrical poet, of whom nothing, I believe, is known. The name of Hyperbolus is upon record, as that of a turbulent public speaker and accuser. Cleonymus is noted in this and other comedies (see p. 10, 1. 112), as a great overgrown coward, and a voracious intrusive guest.

CHORUS.

Our friend's affairs improve apace; his lucky specula-

Is raising him to wealth and place, to name and reputation.

With a revenue neat and clear, Arising without risk or fear, No sycophant will venture here To spoil his occupation Not Ctesias, the dirty spy, that lately terrified him, Nor Prepis, with his infamy, will jostic side beside him

Clothed in a neat and airy dress,
He'll move at ease among the press,
Without a fear of nastiness,
Or danger to betide him

Hyperbolus will never dare to indict him nor arrest

Cleonymus will not be there to bother and molest him Nor he, the bard of little price,

Cratinus, with the ourls so nice, Cratinus in the new device In which the barber drest him.

Nor he, the paltry savey rogue, the poor and unde serving

Lysistratus, that heads the vogue, in impudence unswerving

Taunt and offence in all he says, Ruin'd in all kinds of ways, In every month of thirty days, Nine and twenty starving

Enter a Theban with his attendants, all bearing burthens, followed by a train of bagpipers

Thes Good troth, I'm right dewn shoulder gall'd, my lads,

Set down your bundles You, take care o' the herbs Gently, be sure don't bruise 'em, and now, you minstrels.

That needs would follow us all the way from Thebes, Blcw wind i' the tail of your bag pipes, puff away Dro. Get out! what wind has brought 'em here,

I wonder?

A parcel of hornets buzzing about the door!
You humble bumble drones—get out! get out!
THEB As Iolaus shall help me, that's well done,
Friend. and I thank you;—coming out of Thebes,
They blew me away the blossom of all these horbs

You've sarved 'em right So now would you please to buy

What likes you best, of all my chaffer here; All kinds, four-footed things and feather'd fowl.

DIC (suddenly, with the common trick of condescension, as if he had not observed him before)

My little tight Boeotian! Welcome kindly,

My little pudding-eater! What have you brought?

THEB In a manner, everything, as a body may say;

All the good cheer of Thebes, and the primest wares, Mats, trefoil, wicks for lamps, sweet marjoram, Coots, didappers, and water-hens-what not? Widgeon and teal

Dic Why, you're come here amongst us, Like a north-wind in winter, with your wild fowl THEB Moreover, I've brought geese, and hares moreover.

And eels from the lake Copais, which is more.

Dic O thou bestower of the best spitchcocks That ever yet were given to mortal man, Permit me to salute those charming eels

THEB (addressing the eel, and delivering it to DICAEO-

Daughter, come forth, and greet the courteous stranger,

First-born of fifty damsels of the lake Dio O long regretted and recover'd late, Welcome, thrice welcome to the Comic Choir, Welcome to me, to Morychus 1, and all —(Ye slaves, prepare the chafing dish and stove) Children, behold her here, the best of eels, The loveliest and the best, at length return'd After six years of absence I myself Will furnish you with charcoal for her sake. Salute her with respect, and wait upon Her entrance there within, with due conveyance [The ecl is here carried off by DICAEOPOLIS'S servants.

¹ At the close of the play, a splendid supper was given by the choregus to the whole Comic Choir; authors, actors, and judges -- Morychus was a noted epicure

Grant me, ye gods! so to possess thee still, While my life lasts, and at my latest hour, Fresh even and sweet as now, with savoury sauce THEB But how am I to be paid for it? Won't you tell me?

Dic. Why, with respect to the eel, in the present ınstance.

I mean to take it as a perquisite,

As a kind of toll to the market, you understand me These other things of course are meant for sale.

THER. Yes, sure I sell 'em all.

Dic. Well, what do you ask? Or would you take commodities in exchange?

THEB. Aye, think of something of your country produce.

That's plentiful down here, and scarce up there Dic. Well, you shall take our pilchards or our pottery

THEB Pilchards and pottery !—Naugh, we've plenty of they

But think of something, as I said before, That's plentiful down here, and scarce up there.

Dia. (after a moment's reflection.) I have it! A true bred sycophant and informer—
I'll give you one, tied neatly and corded up,

Like an oil jar

THER

Aye, that's fair, by the holy twins! He'd bring in money, I warrant, money enough, Amongst our folks at home, with showing him, Like a mischief full kind of a foreign ape Dic. Well, there's Nicarchus moving down this

Laying his informations. There he comes

THEB (contemplating him with the eye of a purchaser) 'A seems but a small one to look at.

Dic

Aye, but I promise ye, He's full of tricks and roguery, every inch of him.

Enter NICABORUS.

Nic. (in the pert peremptory tone of his profession as

Whose goods are these? these articles?

We be come here from Thebes Mine, sure;

Then I denounce them As enemies' property.

THEB (with an immediate outcry) Why, what harm

The birds and creatures?-Why do you quarrel with NIG

And I'll denounce you too THEB

What, me? What for?

Nic To satisfy the bystanders, I'll explain — You've brought in wicks of lamps from an enemy's

Dic (ironically) And so, you bring 'em to light? NIC I bring to light

A plot!—a plot to burn the arsenal!

Die (ironically) With the wick of a lamp?

DIC. Undoubtedly.

Nic. (with great gravity) A Boeotian might be capable

On the back of a cockroach, who might float with it Into the arsenal, with a north-east wind,

And if once the fire caught hold of a single vessel,

The whole would be in a blaze.

Dic (serzing hold of him.) You dog! you villain! Would a cockroach burn the ships and the arsenal?

Nic Bear witness, all of ye

And bring me a band of straw to bind him up, There, stop his mouth;

And send him safely away, for fear of damage, Gently and steadily, like a potter's jar.

The metre of the following song is given as a tolerably near approach to that of the original in fact, the nearest which has been found consistent with the necessity of rima

CHOR. To preserve him safe and sound, You must have him fairly bound, With a cordage nicely wound, Up and down, and round and round, Securely pack'd.

Dic. I shall have a special care, For he's a piece of paltry ware, And as you strike him, here—or there,—(striking him) The noises he returns declare—(the informer screaming)

He's partly crack'd 1

CHOR. How then is he fit for use? Dio As a store jar of abuse Plots and lies he cooks and brews, Slander and seditious news,

Or anything Снов. Have you stow'd him safe enough? Dic. Never fear, he's hearty stuff, Fit for usage hard and rough,

Fit to beat and fit to cuff,

To toss and fling You can hang him up or down, By the heels or by the crown THEE I'm for harvest business bown.

CHOR. Fare ye well, my jolly clown

We wish ye joy You've a purchase tight and neat, A rogue, a sycophant complete, Fit to bang about and beat, Fit to stand the cold and heat, And all employ

1 The soundness of an earthen vessel is ascertained by striking a smart blow upon it, and attending to the tone which it gives

2 The informer being by this time fairly corded and packed, is flung about and bung up, in confirmation of Dicacopolis's warranty

I'd a hard job with the rascal, tying him up ! Come, my Bocotian, take away your bargain.

THEB (speaking to one of his servants)
Ismenius, stoop your back, and heave him up There-softly and fairly-so-now carry him off.

Dic. He's an unlucky commodity, notwithstand-

If he earns you a profit, you can have to say, What few can say, you've been the better for him, And mended your affairs by the informer.

Enter a SLAVE.

SLAVE (in a loud voice) Hoh, Dicacopolis! Well, what's the matter? Drc

Why need ye bawl so?

Lamachus sends his orders, With a drachma for a dish of quails, and three For that Copaic cel, he bid me give you

Dic An eel for Lamachus? Who is Lamachus? The fierce and hardy warrior; he that SLAVE

wields

The Gorgon shield, and waves the triple plume Drc And if he'd give me his shield, he should not have it.

Let him wave his plumage over a mess of saltfish. What's more, if he takes it amiss, and makes a not.

I'll speak to the clerk of the market, you may tell him. -But as for me, with this my precious basket, Hence I depart, while ortolans and quails Attend my passage and partake the gales. Exit.

CHORUS

An attempt has been here made to reproduce in English the peculiar metre of the original, in which (after an irregular beginning) each line is made to consist of four cretic measures, of which it is requisite that the three first should be of the form already described in p 16 (namely, a crotchet followed by three quavers). The difficulty arising from the great scarcity of short syllables in the English language, as compared with the Greek, has led to some infractions of this rule, in the unequal length of some of the lines, and the substitution of the common cretic measure, in its usual unresolved form, 2 not to mention one or two indefensible but unavoidable false quantities, together with certain hiatuses and semihiatuses, which in a less restricted motre it would not have been difficult to avoid

EPIRRHEMA.

O behold. O behold The serene happy sage, The profound mighty mind. Miracle of our age.

Calmly wise, prosperous in enterprise, Cool, correct, boundless in the compass of his intellect Savoury commodities and articles of every hind Pouring in upon him, and accumulating all around. Some to be reserved apart, ready for domestic use .

Some again, that require Quickly to be broild or roast, hastily devour'd and smoused.

On the spot, piping hot.

See there, as a sample of his hospitable elegance. Feathers and a litter of his offal at the door display'd! War is my aversion, I detest the very thought of him. Never in my life will I receive him in my house again, Positively never, he behaved in such a beastly way There we were assembled at a dinner of the neighbour hood. Mirth and unanimity prevail'd till he reversed it all, Coming in among us of a sudden, in a haughty style. Civilly we treated him enough, with a polite request, 'Please ve to be seated, and to join us in a fair

¹ The whole of the English liturgy gives only one instance of five short syllables in succession. In the first three lines of Herodotus we find a succession of six and of five. ² As may be seen in Il. 8, 9, 10 and 11

Nothing of the kind t but unaccountably he began to storm,

Brandishing a torch as if he meant to set the house

afire,

Swaggering and hectoring, abusing and assaulting us.

First he smash'd the jars, he spoilt and spilt the wines.

Next he burnt the stakes, and ruin'd all the vines.

ANTEPHPHI MA.

An endeavour to develop with more effect a pretty fanciful allusion in the original, has led to another infraction of the metrical rule above described. It is to be hoped, however, that the passage in question (from 11 1283-90) will not be found to exhibit any marked departure from the general character which belongs to this peculiar form of the cretic metre. The picture, the work of Zeuris, was an object well known to all the inhabitants of Athens; for the sake of the modern reader, it was necessary to insert a slight sketch of it.

Wherefore are ye gone away, Whither are ye gone astray, Lovely Peace,

Vanishing, eloping, and abandoning unhappy Greece?—Love is as a painter ever, doing on a fair design. Zeuxis has illustrated a vision and a wish of mine.

Cupid is portray'd
Naked, unarray'd,
With an amaranthine braid
Waving in his hand,
With a lover and a maid
Bounden in a band
Cupid is uniting both,
Nothing loath

Nothing loath
Think then if I saw ye with a Cupid in a tether, dear,
Binding and uniting us eternally together here.
Think of the delight of it, in harmony to live at last,
Waking it a principle to cancel all offences past.

Really I propose it, and I promise ye to do my best, (Old as you may fancy me), to sacrifice my peace and rest,

Working in my calling as a father of a family, Labouring and occupied in articles of husbandry You shall have an orohard, with the fig trees in a border round

Planted all in order, and a vineyard and an olive ground.

When the month is ended, we'll repose from toil, With a bath and banquet, wine and anointing oil

HERALD, or CRYER.

Hear yo! good people i hear ye! a Festival—According to ancient oustom—this same day—The feast of the pitchers—with the prize for drinkers, To drink at the sound of the trumpet. He that wins To receive a wineskin, Ctesiphon's own skin IDIO Oslaves! ye boys and women! Heard ye not

The summons of the herald? Hasten forth, With quick dispatch, to boil, to roast, to fry, Hacking and cutting, plucking, gutting, flaying, Hashing and slashing, mineing, fricasseeing And plait the garlands nimbly, and bring me here Those, the least shewers of all, to truss the quals

When Aristophanes cannot make use of his chorus to sustain an efficient part, he is apt to indemnify himself for the incumbrance they create, by turning the essential characteristics of a chorus into ridicule Hore then, and at the close of the following scene (that between Dicaeopolis and the countryman), they are represented as time-serving and obsequious, in the Lysistrata, as dawdling, useless, and silly (il 319-49), and in the Birds, as exciting the

¹ The notion of a person's being flayed, and having his skin converted into a wine-keg, appears to have been familiar to the imagination of the Athenians, and of frequent recurrence in their low colloquial languago. Ctesiphon is only known as having been ridiculed by the comic poets for his extreme corpu lence. The conqueror, therefore, would be rewarded with a prize of unusual magnitude

spleen and impatience of the practical active man of business, by their vague speculations and poetical pedantry (Il 1313-36) In the Peace, the absurdity of introducing such a chorus is kept out of sight by the absurd, unmanageable behaviour of the chorus itself (l. 309)

Снов. Your designs and public ends, First attracted us as friends. But the present boil'd and roast Surprises and delights us most. Dic Wait awhile, if nothing fails, You shall see a dish of quails CHOR. We depend upon your care. Dic. Rouse the fire and mend it there. See with what a gait and air, What a magisterial look, Like a cool, determined cook, He conducts the whole affair.1

Enter a Country Man, groaning and lamenting.

COUNTR. O miserable! wretched! wretched man! Dic Fellow, take care with those unlucky words. Apply them to yourself.

COUNTR

Ah, dear good friend,
So you've got peace; a peace all to yourself!

And if ye could but spare me a little drop, COUNTR Just only a little taste, only five years

Dic Why, what's the matter with ye? I'm rumated.

Quite and entirely, losing my poor beasts, My oxen, I lost 'em, both of 'em

In what way?

A dignified and authoritative demeanour is an essential requisite to the perfection of the culinary character. The complete cook (as described in that admirable piece of goodhumoured parody L'homme des champs à table)-

Donne avec dignité des loix dans sa cuisine, Et dispose du sort d'un coq ou d'un dindon, Avec l'air d'un sultan qui condamne au cordon: Son maintien est altier, et sa mine farouche

COUNTR. The Bocotians! the Bocotians! It was thev

They came down at the back of Phyle there, And drove away my bullocks, both of 'em Dic. But you're in white, I see, you're out of mourning

COUNTR. (in continuation.)

That indeed were all my comfort and support That used to serve for my manure and maintenance In dung and daily bread,—the poor dear beasts.

Dro. And what is it you want?

COUNTR. I'm blind well nigh, With weeping and grief.—Derketes is my name, In a farm here next to Phyle born and bred So if ever you wish to do what's friendly by me,

Do smear my two poor eyes with the balsam of peace Dio. Friend, I'm not keeping a dispensary COUNTR. Do, just to get me a sight of my poor Oxen!

Oxen!
DIC Impossible! you must go to the hospital
COUNTR. Do pray, just only give me the least drop
DIC. Not the least drop—not I—go—get ye gone COUNTR. Oh dear! oh dear! oh dear! my poor
dear oxen

[Exit

Chor. He, the chief, is now possessing Peace as an exclusive blessing,

Which he will not part withal
Dio. Mix honey with the savoury dishes!
Be careful with the cuttle fishes!

Stew me the kidneys with the caul!
CHOR. Hear him shout there! Hear him bawl!
Dio. (louder) Season and broil him there—that eel i

CHOR. You don't consider what we feel, We're famish'd here with waiting,

While you choke Us with your smoke,

And deafen us with prating
Dio. Those cutlets brown them nicely—there—do ye mind.

Enter a BRIDESMAN.

BRID. Hoh, Dicaeopolis!

Dic Who's there! who's that?

BRID A bridegroom, that has sent a dish of meat

From his marriage feast.

Dic. Well! come! that's handsome of him;
That's proper, whoever he is, that's as it should be Brid In fact, my friend the bridegroom, he that sent it,

Objects to foreign service just at present;

He begs you'd favour him with the balsam of peace; A trifling quantity, in the box I've brought

Dic No, no! take back the dish; I can't receive

ıt

Dispose it somewhere else; take it away.

I would not part with a particle of my balsam,

For all the world-not for a thousand drachmas

But that young woman there, who's she?

Brid The bridesmaid:

With a particular message from the bride,

Wishing to speak a word in private with you.

Dic Well, what have ye got to say? Let's hear it all!

Come—step this way—No, nearer—in a whisper—Nearer, I say—come, there now, tell me about it.

[After listening with comic attention to a supposed whisper

—Oh bless me, what a capital, comical, Extraordinary string of female reasons
For keeping a young bridegroom safe at home!

—Well, we'll indulge her, since she's only a woman; She's not obliged to serve, bring out the balsam! Come, where's your little vial?—but I say—Do you know the manner of it?—No, not you How should you, a girl like you! What, I must tell you?

Yes—and you'll tell the bride; she must observe; When a ballot is on foot for foreign service;

At the hour of midnight, when he's fast asleep, Then she must be particularly careful, Without disturbing him, to anoint him. There! [Giving her back the wal Exit BRIDESMAID Now take the balsam back, and bring me a funnel To rack my wine off I must mix my wine.

Chor. See yet another! posting here, it seems,

With awful tidings, anxious and aghast

Mess Ho, Lamachus, I say! Lamachus, Hoh! Here's terror and tribulation, wars and woe!

> [Lamachus appears, probably with some appen dage, to mark the interest which he had been taking in the culinary operations supposed to be going on behind the stage.

LAM What hasty summons shakes the castle gates?

MESS The generals have dispatch'd an order to

To muster your caparisons and garrisons, And march to the mountain passes, there to wait In ambush in the snow for fresh advices Have been received, with a credible intimation Of a suspicion of an expedition

Of a marauding party from Boeotia.

LAM. Generals ! aye, generals ! the more the worse Dic. Well, is not it hard that a man can't eat his dinner.

But he 's to be disturb'd and call'd from table. With wars, and Lamachus's, and what not?

Lam. You mock me, alas! DIG. Say, would you wish to grapple, In single combat, with this mailed monster?

[Showing a lobster

Lam. Alas, that dismal fatal messenger! Dic But here's a message too, coming for me MESS 2ND Hoh, Dicaeopolis!

Dic. Well, what?

Mess 2nd You're summon'd To go without a moment's loss of time

With your whole cookery, to the priest of Bacchus. The company are arrived; you keep them waiting, Everything else is ready,—couches, tables. Cushions, and coverlids for mattresses, Dancing and singing girls for mistresses, Plum-cake and plain, comfits and caraways, Confectionary, fruits preserved and fresh, Relishes of all sorts, hot things and bitter, Savouries and sweets, broil'd biscuits, and what not; Flowers and perfumes and garlands, everything. You must not lose a moment

Lam Out alas!

Wretch that I am!

DIC 'Tis your own fault entirely, For enlisting in the service of the Gorgons There, shut the door, and serve the dishes here.

LAM My knapsack and camp service, bring it out.
DIC My dinner service; bring it here, you lout
LAM Give me my bunch of leeks, the soldiers' fare.
DIC I'm partial to veal cutlets; bring them there.
LAM Let's see the saltfish, it seems like to rot
DIC I take fresh fish, and broil it on the spot
LAM. Bring me the lofty feathers of my crest DIC. Bring doves and quails, I scarce know which is best

LAM. Behold this snowy plume of dazzling white. Dic. Behold the roasted dove, a savoury sight LAM. Don't mock these arms of mine, good fellow, prithee.

Did These quails of mine, don't think to take them with ye.

LAM. The case that holds my crest,—bring it in haste

Dic And the hare-pie for me,—bring it in paste. Lam. My crest,—have the moths spoilt it? no, not yet

DIC My dinner,—shall I spoil it by a whet?
LAM. Fellow, direct not your discourse to me.
DIC Aye, but this boy and I, we can't agree;
And we've a kind of wager, which is best,

Locusts or quals forsooth

Lam. Sırrah, your jest

Is insolent.

Dic. My wager's gone this bout He's all, you see, for locusts, out and out.

Various demonstrations of monace and defiance take place between Lamachus and Dicacopolis Lamachus has called for his lanco in anger, Dicaeopolis calls for the spit hoth are hrought, but neither of thom in a state fit for sorvice Lamachus (after a hostile reconnoitring look), conscious of his present disadvantage, proceeds to unsheathe his rusty weapon, hut, in the meantime, Dicaeopolis has succeeded in disengaging his spit from the roast meat, and appears again ready to confront him npon equal terms Here again are reciprocal looks and gestures of hostility, which torminate in mutual forbearance. Any amusoment which this scene might have afforded to the spectators, must have been derived from the humour of the performers, to the more reader, and more particularly to the modernereader, it must be uninteresting, and might have been passed over, but for a wish (which perhaps has been carried too far) to omit nothing that was admissible

LAM Bring here my lance, unsheathe the deadly point.

Dic. Bring here the spit, and show the roasted

LAM. This sheath is rusted. Come, boy, tug and try

Ah, there it comes

Dic. (unspitting his roast meat)

It comes quite easily

LAM. Bring forth the props of wood, my shield's support.

Drc. Bring bread, for belly timber, that's your sort!

Lam. My Gorgon orbed shield, bring it with speed. Dic. With this full orbed pancake I proceed.

LAM. Is not this insolence too much to bear?
Dic. Is not this pancake exquisite and rare?

ARISTOPHANES

LAM. Pour oil upon the shield! What do I trace In the divining mirror? 'Tis the face Of an old coward, petrified with fear, That sees his trial for desertion near.'

Dic. Pour honey on the pancake! what appears?

A comely personage, advanced in years; Firmly resolved to laugh at and defy Both Lamachus and the Gorgon family.

LAM. Bring forth my trusty breastplate for the fight

Dic Bring forth the lusty goblet, my delight!

LAM. I'll charge with this, accounted every limb.

Dic I'll charge with this, a bumper to the brim

LAM. Boys, strap the shield and hedding in a pack!

I'll bear myself my knapsack on my back

Dro Boy, strap the basket with my feasting mess,

While I just step within to change my dress

Lam. Come, boy, take up my shield, and trudge away

It snows!—Good lack, we've wintry work to-day.

Dio. Boy, take the basket. Jolly work, I say

[Exeunt severally]

CHORUS.

Go your ways in sundry wise,
Each upon his enterprise
One determined to carouse,
With a garland on his brows,
And a comely lass beside him
His opponent forth hath hied him,
Resolute to pass the night,
In a military plight,
Undelighted and alone;

It was a common practice to anoint the shield before battle. There was likewise a species of divination practised by figures reflected from an oiled surface. These two usages are here alluded to A similar mode of divination appears from the report of modern travellers to be still employed in Egypt.

Starving, wheezing, Sneezing, freezing, With his head upon a stone

The action of the stage, and even all allusion to it, sre suspended during the following songs, which serve to afford an interval of dramatic time during which Dicaeopolis may he supposed to have returned from his feast, and Lamachns from his expedition The Chorus remain in possession of the stage, and of their primitive privilege of desultory individual satire The latter is directed against Antimachus, who, it seems, had given offence to the dramatic powers by the scantiness of his entertain-I do not know whether it would be refining too much, to observe that even this capricious sally harmonizes with what has preceded, as well as with the interval which is supposed to elapse by the culmary images, in the first part, and by the description of a person returning home late at night, in the second Some circumstances in the original are omitted in the translation, as they seem intended to account for what does not appear unaccountable to a modern, namely, that a man should walk home at night without a stick.—In the passage which immediately follows, the Chorus commence their remonstrance in a calm, soher tone which they are unable to maintain effect is produced in the original, by the quiet, prosaic, methodical form of words by which Antimachus is designated-a nicety of tone which it was impossible to attain, or at least to render ohvious in a translation

CHORUS

We're determined to discuss
Our difference with Antimachus,
Calmly, simply, candidly,
Praying to the powers ahove,
And the just, almighty Jove,
To—sink and blast him utterly.
He that sent us all away
Tother evening from the play,
Hungry, thirsty, supperless,

Him we shortly trust to see Sunk in equal misery,

In the like distress, With a pennyworth of fish, And a curious eager wish

To behold it fried; Let him watch, and wait, and turn, With a hungry, deep concern,

Standing there beside. Let an accident befall,

Which shall overturn the stall,

And the fishes frying, There shall he behold the dish Topsy-turvy, with the fish

In the kennel lying
As he stoops to pick and wipe it,
Let a greedy greyhound gripe it,
Snatch and eat it flying.

Him let other ills befall,
Walking home beneath the wall,
Late at night, attack'd by ruffians,
Orestes and his ragamuffins,
Unprotected and alone,
Groping round to find a stone,
Let him grasp for his defence
A ponderous sir-reverence,
Furious, eager, in the dark,
Let him fling and miss the mark,
Smiting upon the cheek, but not severely,
Cratinus merely!

MESSENGER, SEBVANT of Lamachus, Lamachus, Dicaeopolis and Chorus.

The following speech of the Messenger is a burlesque of the tragic speeches in which the arrival of the wounded here was announced in the last act of a Tragedy

MESSENGER.

Ye slaves that dwell in Lamachus's mansion. Prepare hot water instantly in the pipkin 1, With embrocations and emollients. And bandages and plaster for your lord. His foot is maim'd and crippled with a stake. Which wounded it, as he leap'd across a trench His ankle bone is out, his head is broken. The Gorgon on his shield all smash'd and spoil'd But when the lofty plume of the cock lorrel That deck'd his helm, fell downward in the dirt, He groan'd, and spake aloud despairingly O glorious light of Heaven Farewell, Farewell! 'For the last time, my destined days are done' Thus meaning and lamenting, down he fell Direct into the ditch, jump'd up again, Rush'd out afresh, rallied the runaways. Made the marauders run, ran after them, With his spear point smiting their hinder parts. But here he comes himself, set the door open.

Lemachus is brought in, wounded and disabled, his appearance and attendants are caricatures of the exhibition of the wounded heroes, whom it had become the fashion to introduce The dialogue is a burlesque of the lyrical agonies and lamentations of the same personages.

LAM. Out, out alas!
I'm rack'd and tern,
With agony scarce to be borne,

¹ The 'pipkin', in allusion to the scantiness of Lamachus's establishment See p 64.

From that accursed spear:

But worst of all, I fear,

If Dicaeopolis beholds me here,

That he, my foe, will chuckle at my fall.

Dic My charming lass,

What joy is this!

What ecstasy do give me a kiss!
There coax me, and hug me close, and sympathize: I've swigg'd the gallon off; I've won the prize.

Lam. O what a consummation of my woes,

What throbs and throes!

Dic Eh there ' my little Lamachus! How goes?

Lam. I'm in distress.

Dic I'm in no less Lam Mock not at my misery.

Dic Accuse me not of mockery.

LAM. 'Twas at the final charge, I'd paid before A number of the rogues, at least a score.

Dic It was a most expensive charge you bore: Poor Lamachus! che was forced to pay the score!

Lam. O mercy, mighty Apollo!

Dic What, do ye holloh

A'ter Apollo? it an't his feast to-day.

LAM. (to his bearers)

Don't press me. Dear friends! But place me

Gently and tenderly.

Dic (to the women)

Caress me,

Dear girls! Embrace me

Gently and tenderly.

LAM Strip off the incumbrance of this warlike gear, And take me to my bed

Dic Strip off incumbrances, my pretty dear,

And take me to your bed

LAM. Or bear me to the public hospital With care

Drc. Bring me before the judges; one and all

Look there!

I've won the prize,

As this true gallon measure testifies.
I've drunk it off —'I triumph great and glorious.'
Chor. And well you may, triumph away, good fellow, you're victorious

Dic. To show my manhood furthermore, and spirit in the struggle,

I quaff'd it off within my breath, I gulp'd it in a gugglo 1 CHOR. Then take the wineskin as your due,

We triumph and rejoice with you.

Dic. Then fill my train.

And join the strain

CHOR. With all my heart.

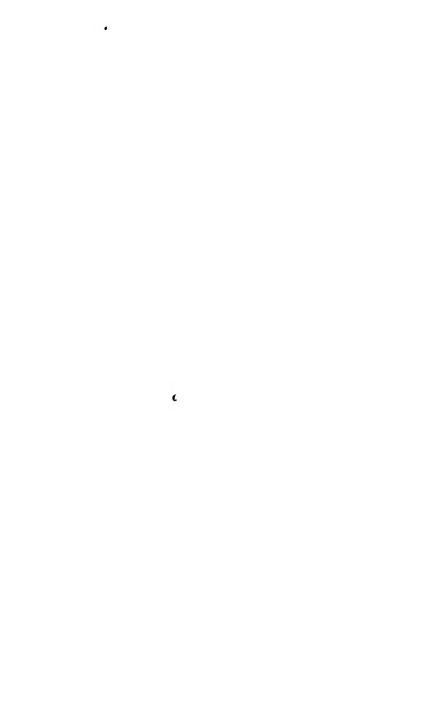

We'll bear a part.
ALL 'Wo're triumphant, great and glorious, 'We're victorious.'

Hurrah t

We've won the day, Wineskin and all !

Hurrah f

¹ Drinking without deglutition, still practised in Catalonia -the Thracian Amystis

THE KNIGHTS

THE KNIGHTS

THE following translation not being calculated for general circulation, it is not likely that it should fall into the hands of any reader whose knowledge of antiquity would not enable him to dispense with the fatigue of perusing a prefatory history. Such prefaces are already before the public, accompanying the translations of Mr Mitchell and Mr Walsh, and will be found satisfactory to those who may be desirous of preliminary information.

It may not, however, be altogether superfluous to prefix a brief summary of preceding circumstances. We have already seen that the Poet, in his comedy of the Babylonians, had made an attack upon the leading demagogues and peculators of his time. In return for this aggression,

Cleon (as described in the Acharnians)

Had dragg'd him to the Senate Honse, And trodden him down and bellow'd over him, And maul'd him till he scarce escaped alive.

The Poet, however, recovered himself, and, in the Parabasis of the same play, had defied and insulted the demagogue in the moet unsparing terms. In the course, however, of the following summer, Cleon, by a singular concurrence of circumstances, had been raised to the highest pitch of favour and popularity. A body of 400 Spartans having been cut off, and blockaded in an island of the Bay of Pylos, now Navarino, this disaster, in which many of the first families of Sparta were involved, induced that republic to sue for peace, which Cleon, who considered his power and influence as dependent on the continuance of the war, was determined to oppose. Insisting, therefore, that the blockaded troop could be considered in no other light than as actual prisoners, he finally pledged himself, with a given additional force, to reduce the Spartans to surrender within a limited time; this he had the good fortune and desterity to effect, and to secure the whole credit of the result for himself, having, in virtue of his appointment, superseded the blockading general, Demosthenes, while, at the same time, he secured the benefit of his experience and ability by retaining him as a colleague. The reader, if he has the work at hand, will do well to refer to Mr Mitford's History, c xv. sec x, for a detailed account of this most singular incident, strikingly illustrative of the distinct character of the two rival republics. It was then, immediately after this event, when his adversary's power and popularity were at their height, that the Poet, undeterred by these apparent disadvantages, produced this memorable and extraordinary drama.

For those readers to whom any further introduction may be necessary, a list of the Dramatis Personae, with some accompanying explanations, will perhaps be sufficient.

DRAMATIS PERSONAE

DEMUS.—A personification of the Athenian people, the John Bull of Athens, a testy, selfish, suspicious old man, a tyrant to his slaves, with the exception of one (a new acquisition), the Paphlagonian—Cleon, by whom he is cajoled and governed.

NICIAS and DEMOSTHENES —The two most fortunate and able generals of the republic, of very opposite characters; the one cautious and superstitious in the extreme, the other a blunt, hearty, resolute, jolly fellow, a very decided lover of good wine. These two, the servants of the public, are naturally introduced as the slaves of DEMUS. After complaining of the ill-treatment to which they are subject in consequence of their master's partiality to his newly-purchased slave, the Paphlagonian, they determine to supplant him, which they effect in conformity to the directions of a secret Oracle, in which they find it predicted that the Tanner (i. e. Cleon the Paphlagonian) shall be superseded by a person of meaner occupation and lower character.

CLEON.—The Tanner (as he is called from his property consisting in a leather manufactory) or the Paphlagonian

(a nickname, applied in ridicule of his mode of speaking, from the word paphlazo, to foam) has been already described. He is represented as a fawning, obsequious slave, insolent and arrogant to all except his master, the terror of his follow-servants.

A Sausage Seller (whose name Ageraeritus, 'se called from the Agera where I got my living,' is not declared till towards the conclusion of the play) is the person announced by the Oracle, as ordained by fate, to baffle the Paphlagonian, and to supersede him in the favour of his master. His breeding and education are described as having been similar to that of the younger Mr. Weller, in that admirable and most unvulgar exhibition of vulgar life, the Pickinck Papers. Finally, after a long struggle, his undaunted vulgarity and superior dextently are orowned with deserved success. He supplants the Paphlagonian, and is installed in the supreme direction of the old gentleman's affairs.

It appears, that the Poet must have been subjected to some particular disadvantages and embarrassments in the production of this play. We have seen, that in the preceding comedy of the Acharnians, Lamachus, a rising military character, had been personated on the stage, and had been addressed by name, without disguise or equivocation, throughout the whole of that play.—This is no longer the case in the play now before us, Nieus, Demosthenes, and Cleon himself, are in no instance addressed by name.—It should seem, therefore, that some enactment must have taken place, restraining the licence of comedy in this particular, and berea distinction is to be observed between the choral parts and the dramatic dialogue, for, in this very play, Cleon is most unsparingly abused by name in the choral songs.—The fact seems to have been that the licentious privilege of the 'Sacred Chorus', consecrated by immemorial usage, and connected with the rites of Bacchus, could not be abridged by more buman authority, while the dramatic dialogue (originally derived, in all probability, from seenes in dumb show, which had been introduced to relieve the monotony of the Chorus) was regarded as mere recent invention destitute of any divine sanction, and liable to be modified and restrained by the power of the state.

With respect to Nicias and Demosthenes, the Poet could have found no difficulty in evading the new law. The masks worn by the actors, presenting a caricature likeness of each of them, would be sufficient to identify them; and it could not be supposed that either of them would be offended at being brought forward in burlesque, when the Poet's intention was evidently friendly towards them both, the whole drift of his comedy being directed against their main antagonist and rival. For the caricature in which they themselves were represented, was in no respect calculated to make them unpopular; on the contrary, the blunt heartiness and good fellowship of the one, and the timid scrupulous piety of the other, were qualities which, in different ways, recommended them respectively to the favour and goodwill of their fellow-citizens, and which were accordingly exhibited and impressed upon the attention of the audience, through the only medium which was consistent with the essential character of the ancient comedy

But among the audience themselves there would undoubtedly be some gainsayers, who, if they were not silenced at the first outset, might have interrupted the attention of others - 'This is too bad,' they might have said, - 'the Poet will get himself into a scrape, -Here is a manifest infraction of the new law '.- In order to obviate this, the Poet in the first scene, before the proper subject of his comedy is developed, but at the precise point when his individual characters (Nicias and Demosthenes) were sufficiently marked and identified, submits the question to a theatrical vote, appealing to the audience for their sanction and approbation of the course which he has adopted This appeal, marked as it is with a character of caution and timidity, is, with a humorous propriety. assigned to the part of Nicias With Cleon, however, the case was different, and there was a difficulty which it required all the courage and ability of the Poet to surmount—no actor dared to expose himself to the resentment of the Demagogue by personating him upon the stage; and among the artists who worked for the theatre, fearful of being considered as accomplices of the Poet in his evasion of the new law, no one could be found who would venture to produce the representation of his countenance in a theatrical mask. The Poet, therefore, undertook the part himself, and, for want of a mask, disguised his own features, according to the rude method of primitive comedy, by smearing them with the lees of wine. It la worthy of remark that, in his effort to surmount this difficulty, ho has contrived to identify the Demagogue from the first moment of his appearance, concentrating his essential character and his known peculiarities in a speech of five lines,-his habitual hoisterous oath and a slaugish use of the dual

In order to occupy the vacant space which has been left by the printer, the translator is tempted, for once, to insert a justificatory comment.—The speech of Nicias in the opening page is extended to three lines, in the original it consists of a line and a half, which might be more accurately and concisely translated thus -

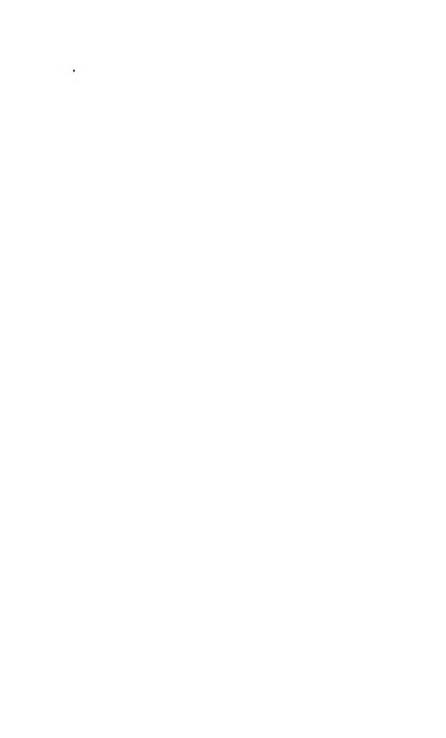

Yes, let him perish in the worst way possible, With all his lies, for a first-rate Paphlagonian.

But there would be one main defect in this accurate translation, namely, that it would not express the intentlon of the author, nor the effect produced by the actor in repeating the original, for, if we consider it in this viow. we find that, short as it is, it contains three distinct breaks . one at the end of the second word, another at the end of the third, and a third at the end of the line momentary pauses are characteristic of timld resentment. expressing Itself by fits and starts,-a character which, to the English reader perusing a printed text, could not be rendered obvious, without employing a compass of words much larger than the original

Again we see, that the courage and anger of Nicias, even with the help of the beating which he has just received, are barely sufficient to enable him to follow the example of Demosthenes, even in wrath and pain he is centented to say ditto' to what his comrade had said before.-The Poet's intention, in this respect, is made more distinctly palpable to the English reader by the first line of the translated speech. And thus much may serve for a commentary on a passage of three lines, and as a sample of others, which, if they were not wearsome and egotistical, might be extended to every page of this and the preceding play

THE KNIGHTS

[After a noise of lashes and screams from behind the scenes, Demosthenes comes out, and is followed by Nicias, the supposed victim of flagellation (both in the dress of slaves) Demosthenes breaks out in great wrath, while Nicias remains exhibiting various contortions of pain for the amusement of the audience.]

DEMOSTHENES. .

Out! out alas! what a scandal! what a shame!
May Jove in his utter wrath crush and confound
That rascally new-bought Paphlagonian slave!
For from the very first day that he came—Brought here for a plague and a mischief amongst us all.

We're beaten and abused continually Nic. (whimpering in a broken voice) I say so too, with all my heart I do, A rascal, with his slanders and lies! A rascally Paphlagonian! so he is! DEM. (roughly and off d-humouredly)

How are you, my poor soul?

Nio. (petishly and whining) Why poorly enough,

And so are you for that matter

[NIOIAS continues writhing and moaning DEM. (as if speaking to a child that had hurt himself) Well, come here then t

Come, and we'll cry together, both of us, We'll sing it to Olympus's old tune BOTH (DEMOSTHENES accompanies NICIAS'S involuntary sobs, so as to make a tune of them)

Mo moo momoo—momoo momoo—momoo momoo.1

DEM. (suddenly and heartily)

Come, grief's no use—It's folly to keep crying. Let's look about us a bit, what's best to be done.

Nic (recovering himself)

Aye, tell me, what do you think?

No; you tell me-Dем.

Lest we should disagree

That's what I won't!

Do you speak boldly first, and I'll speak next.

Dem (significantly, as quoting a well-known verse)

'You first might utter, what I wish to tell'2

NIC Aye, but I'm so down-hearted, I've not spirit To bring about the avowal cleverly,

In Euripides's style, by question and answer.

DEM Well, then, don't talk of Euripides any more, Or his mother either; don't stand picking endive: 3 But think of something in another style,

To the tune of 'Trip and away'

Yes, I'll contrive it: NIC Say 'Let us' first, put the first letter to it, And then the last, and then put E, R, T. 'Let us Az ert' I say, 'Let us Azert'. 'Tis now your turn-take the next letter to it. Put B for A.

'Let us Bezert' I say— DEM. Nic. 'Tis now my turn—' Let us Cezert ' I sav. 'Tis now your turn.

1 Our common tune, with a syllable added to it, may be made to suit the trimeter lambic, and may be sung lamentably enough

When War's alarms first tore my Willy from

A friend who has accidentally taken up this sheet, tells me that he heard this very chaunt, 'Mo moo,' &c, on the coast opposite Corfu, in a house where the family were moaning over the dead

² From the tragedy of Hippolytus Phaedra is trying to lead her nurse to mention the name of Hippolytus, while she avoids it herself

Bis mother was said to have been an herb woman See Ach p 28, 29

DEM 'Let us Dezert' I say Nic. You've said it!—and I agree to it—now repeat

Once more!

Let us Dezert! Let us Dezert! DEM NIC. That's well.

Dem But somehow it seems unlucky, rather, An awkward omen to meet with in a morning! 'To meet with our Deserts!'

NIC. That's very true. Therefore I think, in the present state of things,
The best thing for us both, would be, to go
Directly to the shrine of one of the gods,
And pray for mercy, both of us together
DEM. Shrines? shrines? Why, sure, you don't believe in the gods

Nto I do

But what 's your argument? Where 's Dem your proof?

Nic. Because I feel they persecute me and hate me. In spite of everything I try to please 'em.

Dem. Well, well That 's true, you're right enough in that.

Nic. Let's settle something

DEM Come then,—if you like, I'll state our case at once, to the audience here Nic It would not be much amiss, but, first of all, We must entreat of them, if the scene and action Have entertain'd them hitherto, to declare it,

And encourage us with a little applause beforehand.

DEM. (to the audience.)

Well, come now! I'll tell ye about it—Here are we A couple of servants—with a master at home Next door to the hustings—He's a man in years, A kind of a bean fed ', husky, testy character, Colerio and brutal at times, and partly deaf. It's near about a month now, that he went And bought a slave out of a tanner's yard, A Paphlagonian born, and brought him home,

1 In allusion to the beans used in balloting

As wicked a slanderous wretch as ever lived.
This fellow, the Paphlagonian, has found out
The blind side of our master's understanding,
With fawning and wheedling in this kind of way:
'Would not you please go to the bath, Sir? surely
It's not worth while to attend the courts to-day.'
And 'Would not you please to take a little refreshment?

And there's that nice hot broth—And here's the threepence

You left behind you—And would not you order supper?'

Moreover, when we get things out of compliment
As a present for our master, he contrives
To snatch 'em and serve 'em up before our faces
I'd made a Spartan cake at Pylos lately,
And mix'd and kneaded it well, and watch'd the baking,

But he stole round before me and served it up: And he never allows us to come near our master To speak a word, but stands behind his back At meal-times, with a monstrous leathern fly-flap, Slapping and whisking it round and rapping us off.

Sometimes the old man falls into moods and fancies, Searching the prophecies till he gets bewilder'd And then the Paphlagonian plies him up, Driving him mad with oracles and predictions. And that's his harvest Then he slanders us, And gets us beaten and lash'd, and goes his rounds Bullying in this way, to squeeze presents from us: 'You saw what a lashing Hylas got just now, You'd best make friends with me, if you love your

Why then, we give him a trifle, or if we don't, We pay for it; for the old fellow knocks us down, And kicks us on the ground, and stamps and rages, And tramples out the very guts of us—

(turning to Nicias)

¹ Sacrifices with distribution of meat, and largesses to the people on holidays

So now, my worthy fellow, we must take A fix'd determination, -now's the time, Which way to turn ourselves and what to do Nic. Our last determination was the best

That which we settled to A' Be Cè De zert DEM. Ave. but we could not escape the Paphlagonian,

He overlooks us all, he keeps one foot In Pylos, and another in the assembly, And stands with such a stature, stride, and grasp, That while his mouth is open in Eatolia 1, One hand is firmly elench'd upon the Lucrians 2. And the other stretching forth to the Peribribcans

NIC. (in utter despondency, but with a sort of quiet qualcrish composure)

Let's die then, once for all, that's the best way, Only we must contrive to manage it, Nobly and manfully in a proper manner

Drn. Aye, aye-Let's do things manfully ! that's my maxim!

Nic. (as before.) Well, there's the example of Themistocles-To drink bull's blood that seems a manly death.

DEM Bull's blood! The blood of the grape, I say! good wine!

Who knows ? it might inspire some plan, some project, Some notion or other, a good draught of it!

Nic. Wine truly! wine!—still hankering after liquor!

Can wine do anything for us? Will your drink Enable you to arrange a plan to save us? Can wisdom ever arise from wine, do ye think?

Dem Do ye say so? You're a poor spring water pitcher I

A sılly, chilly soul Pll tell ye what It's a very presumptuous thing to speak of houor.4 As an obstacle to people's understanding.

² Locrians * Perrhebians. Though Demosthenes has not been drinking, his speech has the tone of a drunken man

It's the only thing for business and dispatch D'ye observe how individuals thrive and flourish By dint of drink: they prosper in proportion;
They improve their properties; they get promotion;
Make speeches, and make interest, and make friends.
Come, quick now—bring me a lusty stoup of wine,
To moisten my understanding and inspire me

Nic Oh dear! your drink will be the ruin of us! DEM. It will be the making of ye!—Bring it here. [Exit NICIAS.

I'll rest me a bit, but when I've got my fill, I'll overflow them all, with a flood of rhetoric, With metaphors and phrases, and what not -

[NICIAS returns in a sneaking way with a pot of

NIC (in a sheepish, silly tone of triumph) How lucky for me it was, that I escaped With the wine that I took!

DEM (carelessly and bluntly) Well, where's the Paphlagonian?

NIC (as before) He's fast asleep—within there, on his back,

On a heap of hides—the rascal! with his belly full, With a hash of confiscations half-digested.

DEM. That's well!-Now fill me a hearty, lusty draught.

Nic (formally and precisely)

Make the libation first, and drink this cup To the good Genius

DEM (respiring after a long draught.) O most worthy

Good Genius! 'tis your genius that inspires me! [Demosthenes remains in a sort of drunken burlesque ecstasy

Nic Why, what's the matter?

I'm inspired to tell you, That you must steal the Paphlagonian's Oracles Whilst he's asleep 1

¹ A general feature of human nature, nowhere more observable

Oh dear, then, I'm afraid, Ntc.

This Genius will turn out my evil Genius [Exit Nicias DEM Come. I must meditate, and consult my pitcher.

And moisten my understanding a little more

[The interval of Nicias's absence is occupied by action in dumb show Demosthenes is enjoy ing himself and getting drunk in private.

NIO (re-entering with a packet)

How fast asleep the Paphlagonian was! Lord bless me, how mortally he snored and hiccupped. However, I've contrived to carry it off,

The sacred Oracle that he kept so secret—

I've stolen it from him.

DEM. (very drunk) That's my clever fellow! Here, give us hold, I must read 'em Fill me a bumper

In the meanwhile—make haste now Let me see

What have we got !- What are they,-these same papers?

Oh ! oracles ! o-ra-cles !-Fill me a stoup of wine

[In this part of the scene a contrast is kept up between the subordinate nervous eagerness of poor NICIAS, and the predominant drunken. phlegmatic indifference of DEMOSTHENES, who is supposed to amuse himself with irritating the impatience of his companion, while he details to him by driblets the contents of his own packet

(fidgeting and impatient after giving him the

Come come! what says the Oracle?

DEM Fill it again! NIC. Does the Oracle say, that I must fill it again ?

than among boys at school, where the poor timid soul is always dispatched upon the most perilous expeditions—Niclas is the fag—Demosthenes the big boy

DEM. (after tumbling over the papers with a hiccup.)
O Bakis! 1

Nic What?

DEM. Fill me the stoup this instant.

NIC (with a sort of puzzled acquiescence)

Well, Bakis, I've been told, was given to drink; He prophesied in his liquor people say.

DEM (with the papers in his hand)

Aye, there it is,—you rascally Paphlagonian! This was the prophecy that you kept so secret.

Nic What's there?

DEM. Why there's a thing to ruin him, With the manner of his destruction, all foretold.

Nic. As how?

DEM (very drunk) Why the Oracle tells you how, distinctly,

And all about it—in a perspicuous manner—

That a jobber in hemp and flax is first ordain'd
To hold the administration of affairs

No Well, there's one jobber. Who's the next?

Read on!

DEM. ² A cattle jobber must succeed to him.

Nic More jobbers! well—then what becomes of him?

DEM He too shall prosper, till a viler rascal Shall be raised up, and shall prevail against him, In the person of a Paphlagonian tanner,

A loud, rapacious, leather-selling ruffian. Nic Is it foretold, then, that the cattle jobber

Must be destroy'd by the seller of leather?

Nic Oh dear! our sellers and jobbers are at an end.

DEM Not yet, there's still another to succeed him.

Of a most uncommon notable occupation.

Nic. Who's that? Do tell me? Must I?

Demosthenes's articulation of this word is assisted by a hiccup.
After the death of Pericles, Eucrates and Lysicles had each taken the lead for a short time

To be sure-Nrc. Dem A sausage seller it is, that supersedes him A sausage seller! marvellous indeed, Most wonderful! But where can he be found?

We must seek him out [DEMOSTHENES rises and bustles up, with the action of a person who, having been drunk, is rousing and recollecting himself for a sudden important occasion His following speeches are all perfectly sober

But see there, where he comes! Nta.

Sent hither providentially, as it were!

O happy man! celestial sausage seller! Friend, guardian and protector of us all Come forward, save your friends, and save the country

S S Do you call me? Yes, we call'd to you, to announce The high and happy destiny that awaits you.

Nic. Come, now you should set him free from the incumbrance 5

Of his table and basket, and explain to him The tenor and the purport of the Oracle, While I go back to watch the Paphlagoman.

DEM. (to the SAUSAGE SELLER gravely) Set these poor wares aside, and now,—bow down To the ground, and adore the powers of earth and heaven.

S S Heigh day! Why, what do you mean? O happy man

Unconscious of your glorious destiny, Now mean and unregarded, but to morrow,

¹ In the tone of Dominie Sampson.

² This speech is intended to express the sudden impression of reverence with which Nicias is affected in the presence of the predestined supreme Sausage-seller -He does not presume to address him, but obliquely manifests his respect by pointing out to Demosthenes (in his hearing) the marks of attention to which he is entitled

The mightiest of the mighty, Lord of Athens!

S. S Come, master, what 's the use of making game? Why can't ye let me wash the guts and tripe, And sell my sausages in peace and quiet?

DEM. O simple mortal, cast those thoughts aside! Bid guts and tripe farewell !- Look there !- Behold [pointing to the audience.

The mighty assembled multitude before ye! S S (with a grumble of indifference)

I see 'em.

DEM. You shall be their lord and master, The sovereign and the ruler of them all, Of the assemblies and tribunals, fleets and armies; You shall trample down the senate under foot, Confound and crush the generals and commanders, Arrest, imprison, and confine in irons, And feast and fornicate in the council house.1

S S. What I?

Yes, you yourself: there's more to come. Mount here, and from the trestles of your stall Survey the subject islands circling round.

S S I see 'em.

DEM And all their ports and merchant vessels?

S. S. Yes all

Then am't you a fortunate happy man? Am't you content?-Come then for a further pros-

Turn your right eye to Caria, and your left To Carthage 21—and contemplate both together.

S S. Will it do me good, d'ye think, to learn to squint?

DEM Not so; but everything you see before you Must be disposed of at your high discretion,

¹ The Prytaneum, see Acharmans, 1 150 the honour of a seat at the public table was sometimes conferred on persons of extraordinary ment in advanced years. See the Parabasis of this play—See also the Apology of Socrates. Cleon had obtained this privilege for himself, and abused it insolently, as appears elsewhere

2 'Carthage' must be the true reading, the right eye to 'Caria' and the left to 'Chalcedon' would not constitute a squint.

By sale or otherwise, for the oracle Predestines you to sovereign power and greatness.

Are there any means of making a great man

Of a sausage selling fellow such as I?

The very means you have, must make ye so, Low breeding, vulgar birth and impudence,

These, these must make ye, what you're meant to be.

S S I can't imagine that I'm good for much DEM Alas! But why do ye say so ?-What 's the meaning

Of these misgivings? I discern within ye A promise and an inward consciousness Of greatness Tell me truly, are ye allied To the families of gentry?

S S Naugh, not I, I'm come from a common, ordinary kindred,

Of the lower order

What a happiness !-Dem. What a footing will it give ye! What a groundwork For confidence and favour at your outset!

S S But bless yet only consider my education!
I can but barely read in a kind of a way

That makes against yel-The only thing against ye— The being able to read, in any way For now no lead nor influence is allow'd To liberal arts or learned education, But to the brutal, base, and under bred. Embrace then and hold fast the promises Which the Oracles of the gods announce to you.

S S But what does the Oracle say ?

DEM Why thus it says, In a figurative language, but withat Most singularly intelligible and distinct, Neatly express'd i' faith, concisely and tersely ¹

¹ This is perfectly in character Demosthenes (as we have seen, p 83, l. 45) does not profess to believe in the gods, yet we see that upon occasion he can discuss the ment of the 'sacred classics', like other critics, therefore, of the same description, be does it with a sort of patronizing tone

'Moreover, when the eagle in his pride, With crooked talons and a leathern hide, Shall seize the black and blood-devouring snake; Then shall the woeful tanpits quail and quake; And mighty Jove shall give command and place To mortals of the sausage-selling race; Unless they choose, continuing as before, To sell their sausages for evermore'

S S But how does this concern me? Explain it, will ye?

DEM The leathern eagle is the Paphlagonian.

S S What are his talons?

That explains itself— DEM.

Talons for peculation and rapacity. S S. But what's the snake?

DEM The snake is clear and obvious: The snake is long and black, like a black-pudding, The snake is fill'd with blood, like a black-pudding. Our Oracle foretells then, that the snake
Shall baffle and overpower the leathern eagle
S S These oracles hit my fancy! Notwithstanding . .

I'm partly doubtful, how I could contrive . . . To manage an administration altogether . . .

DEM. The easiest thing in nature '-nothing easier! Stick to your present practice follow it up In your new calling Mangle, mince and mash, Confound and hack, and jumble things together! And interlard your rhetoric with lumps Of mawkish sweet, and greasy flattery Be fulsome, coarse, and bloody!—For the rest, All qualities combine, all circumstances, To entitle and equip you for command; A filthy voice, a villainous countenance, A vulgar birth, and parentage, and breeding. Nothing is wanting—absolutely nothing And the oracles and responses of the gods, And prophecies, all conspire in your behalf.— Place then this chaplet on your brows!—and worship

The anarchic powers, and rouse your spirits up To encounter him —

SS But who do ye think will help me? For all our wealthier people are alarm'd And terrified at him, and the meaner sort In a manner stupefied, grown dull and dumb

DEM. Why there's a thousand lusty cavahers, Ready to back you, that detest and scorn him, And every worthy, well-born citizen,

And every candid, critical spectator, And I myself, and the help of Heaven to boot — And never fear, his face will not be seen, For all the manufacturers of masks. From cowardice, refused to model it It matters not, his person will be known Our audience is a shrewd one—they can guess.

Nic. (in alarm from behind the scenes)
Oh dear! Oh dear! the Paphlagonian's coming

Enter CLEON with a furious look and voice.

CLEON By heaven and earth! you shall abide it dearly.

With your conspiracies and daily plots Against the sovereign people!—Hah! what's this?— What's this Chalcidian goblet doing here?— Are ye tempting the Chalcidians to revolt? 1_ Dogs! villains! every soul of ye shall die

[The SAUSIGE SELLER runs off in a fright DEM. Where are ye going ?—Where are ye running?

-Stop! Stand firm, my noble, valiant, sausage seller! Never betray the cause Your friends are nigh (to the Chorus)

Cavaliers and noble captains! now's the time! advance in sight!

March in order-make the movement and out-flank him on the right!

1 The Chalcidians did in fact revolt in the following year, their intentions were probably suspected at the time

(to the SAUSAGE-SELLER)

There I see them bustling, hasting!—only turn and make a stand,

Stop but only for a moment, your allies are hard at hand.

It is necessary to repair an omission which the reader may have already noticed among the Dramatis Personae enumerated in pages 76-7 no mention has been made of the Chorus, from which, as usual, the comedy derived its title—'The Knights'. This body composing the middle order of the state were, as it appears, decidedly hostile to Cleon—In the first lines of the preceding play, the ment of having procured his conviction and punishment on a charge of bribery is ascribed to them; and again in the same play the Chorus express their detestation of the demagogue by threatening to sacrifice him to the vengeance of the Knights,' and we have just seen that Demosthenes encourages the Sausage-seller by promising him the assistance of a thousand of them,—' lusty cavaliers' who 'scorn and detest' his antagonist.

[During the last lines the Chorus of cavaliers with their hobby-horses have entered and occupied their position in the orchestra. They begin their attack upon Cleon

CHOR. Close around him, and confound him, the confounder of us all

Pelt him, pummel him and mawl him; rummage, ransack, overhaul him,

Overbear him and out-bawl him, bear him down and bring him under.

Bellow like a burst of thunder, robber! harpy! sink of plunder!

Rogue and villain! rogue and cheat! rogue and villain I repeat!

Oftener than I can repeat it, has the rogue and villain cheated.

Close around him left and right; spit upon him; spurn and smite:

¹ See Ach p 20, 1 357

Spit upon him as you see, spurn and spit at him like me.-

But beware or he'll evade ye, for he knows the private

Where Euerates 1 was seen escaping, with the mill dust on his back

CLEON Worthy veterans of the jury, you that, either right or wrong.

With my threepenny provision,2 I've maintain'd and cherish'd long,

Come to my aid! I'm here waylaid—assassinated and betrav'd!

CHOR. Rightly served! we serve you rightly, for your hungry love of pelf,

For your gross and greedy rapine, gormandizing by yourself.

You that ere the figs are gather'd, pilfer with a privy twitch

Fat delinquents and defaulters, pulpy, luscious, plump and rich . Pinching, fingering and pulling—tampering, selecting,

oulling,

With a nice survey discerning, which are green and which are turning. Which are ripe for accusation, forfeiture and confiscation Him besides, the wealthy man, retired upon an easy rent.

Hating and avoiding party, noble minded, indolent, Fearful of official snares, intrigues and intricate affairs .

Him you mark, you fix and hook him, whilst he's gaping unawares,

At a fling, at once you bring him hither from the Chersonese 3,

1 See note to p 88 —He was also an owner of mills, as appears by the scholiast.

The Juryman's fee a means of subsistence to poor old mendriven from their homes by the war
Of Thrace Many Athenians possessed estates, and resided

there for a quiet life

Down you cast him, roast and baste him, and devour him at your ease.

CLEON. Yes! assault, insult, abuse me! this is the return I find,

For the noble testimony, the memorial I design'd: Meaning to propose proposals for a monument of stone,

On the which your late achievements 1 should be carved and neatly done.

CHOR. Out, away with him! the slave! the pompous, empty, fawning knave!

Does he think with idle speeches to delude and cheat us all?

As he does the doting elders, that attend his daily call.2

Pelt him here, and bang him there; and here and there and everywhere

CLEON. Save me, neighbours! Oh, the monsters!

O my side, my back, my breast!

What you're forced to call for help? You brutal, overbearing pest.

S. S (returning to CLEON) I'll astound you with my voice, with my bawling looks and noise.

CHOB. If in bawling you surpass him, you'll achieve a victor's crown;

If again you overmatch him, in impudence, the day's our own.

CLEON. I denounce this traitor here, for sailing on clandestine trips,

With supplies of tripe and stuffing to careen the Spartan ships.

S. S I denounce then and accuse him for a greater,

worse abuse:

That he steers his empty paunch, and anchors at the public board;

Running in without a lading, to return completely stored!

CHOR. Yes! and smuggles out moreover loaves and luncheons not a few,

1 In the expedition to Corinth

² The veterans of the Jury; see note 2, p 95.

More than ever Pericles, in all his pride, presumed to do CLEON (in a thundering tone.) Dogs and villains. vou shall die! S S (in a louder, shriller tonc.) Ave! I can scream ten times as high. I'll overbear ye, and out-bawl ye But I'll out-scream ye, and out-squall ye. SSI'll impeach you, whilst abroad. CLEON Commanding on a foreign station I'll have you sliced, and slash'd, and scored.1 S S Your hon's skin of reputation, CLEON Shall be flay'd off your back and tann'd, I'll take those guts of yours in hand. SS Come, bring your eyes and mine to meet! CLEON And stare at me without a wink! Yes! in the market-place and street, SS I had my birth and breeding too. And from a boy, to blush or blink. I scorn the thing as much as you. I'll denounce you if you mutter CLEON I'll douce ye the first word you utter SS My thefts are open and avow'd. CLEON And I confess them, which you dare not. But I can take false oaths aloud. SS And in the presence of a crowd. And if they know the fact I care not. What! do you venture to invade My proper calling and my trade? CLEON -But I denounce here, on the spot. The sacrificial tripe you've got, The tithe it owes was never paid It owes a tithe, I say, to Jove, You've wrong'd and robb'd the powers above.

¹ The threats of each party are in the terms of their respective trades.

CHORUS. Cretic Metre 1

Dark and unsearchably profound abyss, Gulf of unfathomable Baseness and iniquity! Miracle of immense. Intense impudence! Every court, every hall, Junes and assemblies, all Are stunn'd to death, deafen'd all, Whilst you bawl. The bench and bar Ring and jar. Each decree Smells of thee, Land and sea Stink of thee

Whilst we

Scorn and hate, execrate, abominate, Thee the brawler and embroiler of the nation and the state

You that on the rocky seat of our assembly raise a din.

Deafening all our ears with uproar, as you rave and howl and grm;

Watching all the while the vessels with revenue sailing m.

Like the tunny-fishers perch'd aloft, to look about and bawl

When the shoals are seen arriving, ready to secure a haul.

CLEON. I was aware of this affair, and every stitch of it I know,

Where the plot was cobbled up and patch'd together. long ago.

S. S. Cobbling is your own profession, tripe and sausages are mine:

But the country folks complain, that in a fraudulent design,2

See note to Ach p 16
 The allusions in these lines relate to some incidents not recorded in history, some artifice by which Cleon had succeeded

You retail'd them skins of treaties, that appear'd like trusty leather.

Of a peace secure and lasting, but the wear and tear and weather

Proved it all decay'd and rotten, only fit for sale and

DEM. Yes! a pretty trick he served me, there was I dispatch'd to go,

Trudged away to Pergasae, but found upon arriving

there.2

That myself and my commission, both were out at heels and bare

In a review of Mr Mitchell's Aristophanes, a passage in his translation of one of the choruses is noted with parti-oular commendation. It is said, 'Mr Mitchell has hit upon the very key-note of Aristophanes, whose choruses are so contrived throughout this play, as to afford a rollof and contrast to the vulgar aerimony of the dialogue, not and contrast to the variation of the datague, not in their logical and grammatical sense, but in their form and rhythm, and in the selection of the words, which, if heard imperfectly, would appear to belong to a grave or tender or beautiful subject. If the occasion had admitted of it, this observation might have been applied admitted of it, this observation might have been applied more particularly to the first lines of each ohorus, for we may remark instances in which the contrast of grave or graceful lines at the commencement was intended to give additional force to the vehemence of invective immediately following in the chorus itself. Thus, in the original of the chorus which is given above, an expression of wonder and awe is conveyed to the car by the mere on wonder and a second of the words themsolves, contradictory to the sense of the words themsolves, obnirationary to the sense of the words themsolves, a kind of contrast which appeared unattainable in the English language.—What could not, therefore, be accomplished by 'form and rhythm' has, in this instance, been attempted by 'the selection of words' But justi-in deluding and disappointing the party, the country people in particular (long excluded from the enjoyment of their property), who were anxious for peace.

³ O altitudo 1 1

ficatory criticism has already been renounced, as absurd and tiresome. This note had been begun, solely for the purpose of bringing under the notice of the reader, with due modification, the observation, somewhat too largely expressed, in the review above mentioned.

Cnorus

Even in your tender years,
And your early disposition,
You betray'd an inward sense
Of the conscious impudence,
Which constitutes a politician

Hence you squeeze and drain alone the rich milch-kine of our allies:

Whilst the son of Hippodamus licks his lips with longing eves

But now, with eager rapture we behold A mighty miscreant of baser mould!

A more consummate ruffian! An energetic ardent ragamuffin!

Behold him there '—He stands before your eyes, To bear you down, with a superior frown,

A fiercer stare,

And more incessant and exhaustless hes

The metre of the lines which follow, namely, the tetrameter-nambic, is so essentially base and vulgar, that no English song afforded a specimen fit to be quoted, and the songs themselves were not proper to be mentioned, at last, Mr Cornewall Lewis (whose kind importunities had extorted the publication of the preceding play of the Acharnians) suggested, as a producible specimen, the first line of a sufficiently vulgar, but otherwise inoffensive song,

A Captain bold of Halifax, who lived in country quarters.

It would not be right that Mr Lewis's name should be mentioned here, without an acknowledgement of the obligations due to him, for his friendly zeal in forwarding that play through the press, and correcting some inaccuracies incidental to the work of a very unsystematic scholar.

The metre, of which so derogatory a character has been given, is always appropriated in the comedies of Aristophanes, to those scenes of argumentative altercation in which the ascendancy is given to the more ignoble character, in this respect it stands in decided contrast with the anapaestic measure

TAMBIO TETRAMETER.

CHOR. (to the SAUSAGE SELLER.)

Now then do you, that boast a birth, from whence you might inherit,

And from your breeding have derived a manhood and a spirit.

Unbroken by the rules of art, untamed by education, Show forth the native impudence and vigour of the nation!

S S Well, if you like, then, I'll describe the nature of him olearly.

The kind of rogue I've known him for

CLEON My friend, you're somewhat early

First give me leave to speak.

I won't, by Jove! Aye You may bellow! I'll make you know, before I go, that I'm the baser fellow

CHOR. Aye! stand to that! Stick to the point, and for a further glory.

Say that your family were base, time out of mind before ve

CLEON Let me speak first!

88 I won't.

CLEON

You shall, by Jove! I won't, by Jove, though! SS

CLEON By Jupiter, I shall burst with rage!

S S No matter, I'll prevent you. CHOR. No, don't prevent, for Heaven's sake!

Don't hinder him from bursting

CLEON What means,-what ground of hope have you ?--to dare to speak against me?

S S What! I can speak! and I can chop-garlic and lard and logic

CLEON. Aye! You're a speaker, I suppose! I should enjoy to see you,

Like a pert scullion set to cook-to see your talents fairly

Put to the test, with hot blood-raw disjointed news arriving,1

Obliged to hash and season it, and dish it in an instant

You're like the rest of 'em—the swarm of paltry weak pretenders

You've made your pretty speech, perhaps, and gain'd

a little lawsuit

Against a merchant foreigner, by dint of waterdrinking,

And lying long awake o' nights, composing and repeat-

And studying as you walk'd the streets, and wearing out the patience

Of all your friends and intimates, with practising heforehand .

And now you wonder at yourself, elated and delighted At your own talent for debate—you silly saucy coxcomb

S S What's your own diet? How do you contrive to keep the city

Passive and hush'd 7-What kind of drink drives ve to that presumption?

CLEON. Why, mention any man besides, that's capable to match me;

That, after a sound hearty meal of tunny-fish and cutlets,

Can quaff my gallon; and at once, without premeditation.

With slang and jabber overpower the generals at Pylos 2

S S But I can eat my paunch of pork, my liver, and my haslets.

¹ When the character of the debate is suddenly changed, by the receipt of unexpected intelligence
² See Mitford, ch xv sect 10, p 293

And scoup the sauce with both my hands and with my dirty fingers

Ill seize old Nicins by the throat, and choke the grand debatem

Chon. We like your scheme in some respects. but still that style of feeding

Keeping the sauce all to yourself, appears a gross proceeding

CLTON But I can domineer and dine on mullets at Miletus

S S And I can cut my shins of beef, and farm the mines of silver

CLTO, I'll burst into the Council House, and storm

and blow and bluster

I'll blow the wind into your tail, and kick you like a bladder

I'll tie you neek and heels at once, and kick

ye to the kennel.

Begin with us then! Try your skill!-CHOR. kicking us all together!

CLTON I'll have ye pilloned in a trice. I'll have you tried for cowardice. I'll tan your hide to cover scats. SS CLEON

Yours shall be made a purse for cheats SS

The luckiest skin 1 that could be found. Dog, I'll pin you to the ground CLEON

With ten thousand tenter hooks. 88

I'll equip you for the cooks, Neatly prepared, with skewers and lard. I'll pluck your eye brows off, I will. CLEON

I'll cut your collops out. I will SS

It is evident, that a scufile or wrestling match takes place here between the two rivals It continues during the verses of Demosthenes and those of the Chorus, the last of which mark that the Sausage-seller has the advantage, and the Sausage-seller's speech of four lines, which follows,

¹ It is well known that purses made from the skins of different animals are more or less lucky -Among ourselves the skin of a weasel, or of a black cat, is esteemed the most universally lucky implies that he is at the same time exhibiting his adversary

in a helpless posture

It is to be observed, that the palaestra was not a mere school of wrestling or boxing —The attention of the masters of the palaestra (like the dancing masters of former times in France and England) was directed to form their pupils

to a general dignity and elegance of carriage

Hence all awkward or indecent effort was disallowed in the palaestra of the better educated class—But, as wrestling was an universal national evercise, it would of course be practised vulgarly among the vulgar, and there would be many tricks and easts retained and practised by the lowest class, which were rejected by the more dignified palaestra. The Sausage-seller was represented as foiling his opponent, by some unbecoming, unsightly effort, which was characteristic of a town blackguard—Thus, the scuffle between them formed a kind of dumb show, analogous to and illustrative of the dialogue; exhibiting in the triumph of the Sausage-seller, the peculiar advantages reserved for superior impudence and vulgarity both in word and deed

DEMOSTHENES.

Yes, by Jove! and like a swine,
Dangling at the butcher's door,
Dress him cleanly, neat and fine,
Wash'd and scalded o'er and o'er;
Strutting out in all his pride,
With his carease open wide,
And a skewer in either side;
While the cook with keen intent,
By the steady rules of art,
Scrutinizes every part,
The tongue, the throat, the maw, the vent.

CHORUS

Some element may prove more fierce than fire! Some viler scoundrel may be seen. Than ever yet has been! And many a speech hereafter, many a word, More villamous than ever yet was heard.

We marvel at thy prowess and admire!

Therefore proceed! In word and deed. Be firm and bold. Keep steadfast hold!

Only keep your hold upon him! Persevere as you began .

He'll be daunted and subdued. I know the nature of the man

S S Such as here you now behold him, all his life has he been known

Till he reap'd a reputation, in a harvest not his own, Now he shows the sheaves 1 at home, that he clandes tinely convey'd,

Tied and bound and heap'd together, till his bargain

can be made

CLEON (released and recovering himself)

I'm at ease. I need not fear ye, with the senate on my side.

And the commons all dejected, humble, poor and stupefied.

CHORDS

Mark his visage! and behold, How brazen, unabash'd and bold! How the colour keeps its place

In his face!

CLEON Let me be the vilest thing, the mattress that Cratinus 2 stains, Or be forced to learn to sing Morsimus's 3 tragic strains.

The famous comic post, now grown old, and infirm, as it appears!

Ridiculed elsewhere as a bad writer of tragedy See the Peace. v 803

¹ The Spartan prisoners taken at Pylos, and kept in the most severe confinement.

If I don't despise and loathe, scorn and execrate ye both

CHORUS.

Active, eager, airy thing 'Ever hovering on the wing,

Ever hovering and discovering Golden sweet secreted honey, Nature's mintage and her money.

-May thy maw be purged and scour'd, From the gobbets it devour'd,

By the emetic drench of law!

With the cheerful ancient saw, Then we shall rejoice and sing,

Chanting out with hearty glee,

'Fill a bumper merrily,

'For the merry news I bring!'
But he, the shrewd and venerable
Manciple of the public table,

Will chant and chuckle and rejoice,

With heart and voice

CLEON May I never eat a slice, at any public sacrifice,

If your effrontery and pretence, shall daunt my steadfast impudence

S S Then, by the memory which I value, of all the bastings in our alley,

When from the dog-butcher's tray I stole the lumps of meat away,—

I trust to match you with a feat, and do credit to my meat,

Credit to my meat and feeding, and my bringing-up and breeding

CLEON Dog's meat! What a dog art thou!—But I shall dog thee fast enow

[CLEON pays no attention to the short dialogue

¹ The old butler and steward of the Prytaneum who had hitherto been used to well-bred company and civil treatment, would be overjoyed at his deliverance from such a guest as Cleon

which follows between the SAUSAGE SELLER and the CHORUS.

The actor's part was in dumb show, exhibiting a mimicry of the Demagogue's usual gesture and deportment, when exciting himself in preparation for a vehement burst of cratery

Then, there were other petty tricks, I practised as a child.

Haunting about the butchers' shops, the weather being mild,

'See, boys,' says I, 'the swallow there!—Why sum mer's come, I say,'

And when they turn'd to gape and stare, I snatch'd a steak away

CHOR. A clever lad you must have been, you managed matters rarely,

To steal at such an early day, so seasonable and fairly S S But if by chance they spied it, I contrived to hide it handily,

Clapping it in between my hams, tight and close and Calling on all the powers above, and all the gods in heaven. And there I stood, and made it good, with staring and forswearing, So that a statesman of the time, a speaker shrewd and

Was heard to say, 'That boy one day will surely rule the city'

CHOR, 'Twas fairly guess'd, by the true test, by your address and daring,

First in stealing, then concealing, and again in swear ıng

I'll settle ye! Yes, both of ye! the storm CLEON of elocution

Is rising here within my breast, to drive you to con

And with a wild commotion, overwhelm the land and ocean

S S. Then I shall hand my sausages, and reef 'em close and tight,

And steer away before the wind, and run you out of sight.

DEM. And I shall go, to the hold below, to see that Exit. all is right.

By the holy goddess, I declare, Rogue and robber as you are, I'll not brook it, or overlook it: The public treasure that you stole, I'll force you to refund the whole . . . (Keep near and by—the gale grows high)

Снов

(in continuation) CLEON.

. . . Ten talents, I could prove it here, Were sent to you from Potidea.

Well, will you take a single one S.S. To stop your bawling and have done?

Yes, I'll be bound—he'll compound, And take a share—the wind grows fair. CHOR This hutricane will overblow. Fill the sails and let her go!

I'll indict ye, I'll impeach, CLEON. I'll denounce ye in a speech; With four several accusations. For your former peculations, Of a hundred talents each.

S.S But I'll denounce ye, And I'll trounce ye, With accusations half a score: Half a score, for having left

Your rank in the army; and for theft I'll charge ye with a thousand more.

I'll rummage out your pedigree, CLEON.

And prove that all your ancestry
Were sacrilegious and accurst.

I'll prove the same of yours; and first,
The foulest treasons and the worst— S. S.

¹ Many of the first families were involved in the guilt of a sacrilegious massacre committed near 200 years before See Mr Clinton's Fasti, Olym 40

Their deep contrivance to conceal Plots against the common weal. Which I shall publish and declare,-Publish, and depose and swear Plots. conceal'd and hidden !-Where? CLEON Where? where plots have always tried 88 To hide themselves—beneath a hide!

Go for a paltry vulgar slave. CLEON Get out for a designing knave Give him back the cuff you got! 88 CHOR. CLEON

Murder! help! a plot! a plot! I'm assaulted and beset!

Strike him harder! harder vet! CHOR.

Pelt him,-Rap him, Slash him,—Slap him, Across the chops there, with a wipe Of your entrails and your tripe 12 Keep him down-the day's your own.

O cleverest of human kind! the stoutest and the boldest.

The saviour of the state, and us, the friends that thou beholdest.

No words can speak our gratitude, all praise appears too little.

You've fairly done the rascal up, you've nick'd him to a tittle.

CLEON By the holy goddess, it 's not new to me This scheme of yours I've known the job long since, The measurement and the scantling of it all,

And where it was shaped out and tack'd together

CHOR. Aye! there it is! You must exert yourself, Come try to match him again with a carpenter's phrase 2

S S Does he think I have not track'd him in his intrigues

A slap on the face of this kind is proverbial in Spain, as the most outrageous of all insults.

² Lines 637, 643—In these passages, the poet marks the degradation of public oratory, infected with vulgar jargon and low metaphors.

At Argos?—his pretence to make a treaty
With the people there?—and all his private parley
With the Spartans?—There he works and blows the coals;

And has plenty of other irons in the fire.

Снов Well done, the blacksmith beats the carpenter

SS (in continuation)

And the envoys that come here, are all in a tale; All beating time to the same tune—I tell ye, It's neither gold nor silver, nor the promises, Nor the messages you send me by your friends, That will ever serve your turn; or hinder me From bringing all these facts before the public.

CLEON. Then I'll set off this instant to the senate;

CLEON. Then I'll set off this instant to the senate; To inform them of your conspiracies and treasons, Your secret nightly assemblies and cabals, Your private treaty with the king of Persia, Your correspondence with Boeotia, And the business that you keep there in the cheese-press,

Close pack'd, you think, and ripening out of sight
S S. Ah! cheese?—Is cheese any cheaper there, d'ye hear?

CLEON By Hercules! I'll have ye crucified!
[Exit CLEON.

CHOR (to the SAUSAGE-SELLER.)

Well, how do you feel your heart and spirits now?
Rouse up your powers! If ever in your youth
You swindled and forswore as you profess;
The time is come to show it Now this instant
He's hurrying headlong to the senate house;
To tumble amongst them like a thunderbolt;
To accuse us all, to rage, and storm, and rave.
S S Well, I'll be broken off then. But these guts

S S Well, I'll be broken off then. But these guts and pudding,

I must put them by the while, and the chopping knife. CHOR. Here, take this lump of lard, to 'noint your neck with;

The grease will give him the less hold upon you,

With the gripe of his accusations.

S S That's well thought of CHOR. And here's the garbe Swallow it down! S S What for? CHOR. It will prime you up, and make you fight the better

-Make haste!

S S Why so I do

Chor. Remember now—
Show blood and game Drive at him and denounce him!

Dash at his comb, his coxcomb, cuff it soundly! Peck, scratch and tear, conculcate, clapperclaw! Bite both his wattles off, and gobble 'em up! And then return in glory to your friends [Exit S S

CHORUS

Well may you speed
In word and deed.
May all the powers of the market-place
Grant ye protection, and help and grace,
With strength of lungs and front and brain,
With a crown of renown, to return again

(Turning to the audience)
But you that have heard and applauded us here,
In every style and in every way,
Grant us an ear, and attend for a while.

To the usual old anapaestic essay

The following parabasis has been already noticed (p. 35 of the Acharmans) in the long preliminary notice prefixed to the parabasis of that play, but the inference which is there so concisely assumed in the footnote, will be better and more conveniently estimated, when placed in Juxtaposition with the composition itself. It has been said, in brief and strong terms, that the poet had become the poetical serf of the community Our knowledge of antiquity

¹ Game-cocks are dieted with garlic, see Acharmans, p 14, Theorus's warning to Dicaeopolis, where a similar note should have been given

is too scanty to enable us to define precisely the mode and degree of this vassalage, to which he thus voluntarily subjected himself, but it is evident that, by demanding (as the text has it) a chorus for himself, he was in effect doing that which is expressed in the translation, namely, embracing a profession, from which he could not retreat. The whole tenor of the following parabasis turns upon the decisive and irretrievable step, which the Poet (after long hesitation, and resisting the importunity of his friends) had at length determined to take, undeterred by the discouraging example of his predecessors in the same line, whom he enumerates and describes, devoting himself irrevocably and exclusively to the composition of comedy

Yet the Poet was already publicly known as the author of three comedies, the Datalers, in which he had exhibited the contrast of two young men, brothers—the one steady and manly, according to the old fashion instructed in the old music and poetry, addicted to gymnastic exercises, living with his father in the country, a lover of hunting and rural sports, the other a thoroughly depraved town rake—a scamp of that new school of which Alcibiades was the patron and the model—aspiring to distinguish himself by foppery, litigation, and speechifying—That excellent comedy of Gresset's, Le Mechant, may be considered as somewhat analogous to this—produced with the same intention, and in a state of society and manners

not altogether dissimilar

His second play, the Babylonians, has been already mentioned (see Ach p 35), of this he was avowedly the author, and had been held responsible for it, as we have already seen

The Acharmans, his third play, is, generally speaking, a comic pleading in favour of peace; but it includes a justification of the Poet as the author of the preceding play (distinctly and palpably in the parabasis, and in a burlesque form in other parts), for Dicaeopolis, in his defence before the Chorus, is the representative of the Poet himself, and that portion of the Chorus, which continues inveterate and unappeased, bring an accusation against him, which has no reference to anything which has occurred in the preceding scenes of the same play; but which is distinctly applicable to the main purport and argument of the Babdonians 1 (see Ach p 32)inveighing against informers

The original, more scrupulously translated, would stand thus 'abusing any man that happened to be an informer', an offence, of which the Dieacopolis of the Acharmans (for the informer Alearchus has not yet appeared) had been, up to this point at least, entirely guiltless. Dieacopolis then, in this instance, is a burlesque representative of the poet himself, put upon his trial for misdemeanours perpetrated in a former play. His adversaries attack him, for having stigmatized individuals as informers. The party who are become favourable to him, justify him, by affirming the truth and correctness of all his imputations.—The reply to this is, that though they might be true, he had no right to give publicity to scandalous and offensive truths, and that he deserves to be punished for it.—There is nothing in this altereation which can in any way be made to bear the slightest reference to anything that had occurred in the preceding scenes of the play itself.

Wo have made a wide digression in our way to a very unsatisfactory conclusion—It may be said—we see very cloarly, from what has been already stated, that Aristophanes was already an avowed writer for the come theatre, regarded as responsible for his productions, when they were deemed objectionable, justifying them himself, in person, in the first instance, and afterwards, under a feigned character in a subsequent drama—What then was the change in his condition and prospects which was produced by 'demanding a chorus for himself'? a term, as it appears, of great import, implying a dovotion of himself exclusively to the task of writing for the stage—What were the emoluments and privileges attached to this profession of a comic author thus authontically assumed?—What, on the other hand, were the disadvantages and disabilities by which those privileges and omoluments were counterbalanced?—This is a question of which the learning and industry of continental scholars may per haps procure a solution, if they have not already afforded it, to those who are conversant in the language and literature of Germany. But something in the mean-while may be deduced from the testimony of the Poet himself. It appears from the scene of Euripides in the Acharmans, that the author must have been entitled to the dresses of the actors; and his perquisites probably extended to the other properties (as they are called) of the stage, with the exception of those which were permanent and immovable. We find the Poet thus speaking of himself in the parabasis of the Peace, contrasting his own conduct with that of other cotemporary comic authors—he says (1 763)

¹ It is noticed as having contained attacks upon a great number of persons

On former occasions he never made use Of the credit he gain'd to corrupt and seduce; But pack'd up his alls, after gaining the day, Contented and joyous, and so went away.

We find, moreover, that the comic poets received a salary from the state, for, in the play of the Frogs, exhibited almost at the close of the war, at a time of great pecuniary difficulty, it seems that their pay was reduced—And the Poet introduces his Chorus of happy spirits in the Elysian fields, excommunicating the economists, in company with other reprobates and profane persons who are warned to withdraw from the sacred rites—they include, in their interdict,

All statesmen retrenching the fees and the salaries Of theatrical bards in revenge for the raileries And jests and lampoons of this holy solemnity.

This appears evidently not to have been serious; or, if serious, would have been very unreasonable, for the retrenchment at that period was universal, extending even to the omnipotent jurymen, who were reduced from a daily pay of three oboli to two Whatever the retrenchment may have been, it seems, as is suggested above, not to have been one which was seriously complained of; and we may safely infer from the general munificence of the Athenians in all matters of art, and from their peculiar passion for the theatre, that in better and more prosperous times the allowances made to the comic poets must have been sufficiently liberal, at least to the three successful competitors, for there were three dramatic prizes, assigned to the first, second, and third best play; a circumstance which of itself implies a considerable pecuniary recompense;

for the third, the least of all, must have been worth having, in a pecuniary view, otherwise, to be ranked as a thirdrate poet would have been felt as an unqualified mortification.—Supposing the prizes to have been merely honorary, no third prize could have existed, for it could never have been considered as an honour From the question of emoluments, we may turn to that of privileges and immunities and here, in the absence of positive authority, we may be contented for the present, with general inferences and analogy According to the notions of heathen antiquity, a professed comic poet would have been considered as a person devoted to the service of Bacchus, a certain character of inviolability must therefore have been attached to him, in common with other persons separated and set apart from the common concerns of the state, and dedicated for life to the service of any other derty —Though modified no doubt in later times, this principle was essentially inherent in the Grecian mind —The slanghter of a poet, 'a servant of the muses, was condemned as an act of sacrilege, and it was in these terms that the assassin of Archilochus was excommunicated by the oracle, and expelled from the temple which he had presumed to enter It is not concervable that these feelings, however modified, could have been altogether extinct in the times of which we are now treating, and it is a singular fact, considering the enormous outrages and attacks upon private character, perpetrated by the comic poets, that (with the exception of the exploded fable of the death of Eupolis) there is no trace to be met with of any personal vengeance directed against any of them. The comic poets have been spoken of above as persons separate and set apart from the ordinary concerns of the state, and so they must have been, either by positive law, or by established and an thoritative enstom, for it is not to be supposed that, to any man standing, in all other respects, upon an equal footing with his fellow citizens, the privilege should have been allowed of assalling them with unlimited ribaldry and abuse —Whatever may be thought of such a privilege in modern times, it was certainly not consonant to the spirit of antiquity to allow it to be enjoyed by any individual, unaccompanied with corresponding disabilities The office of a comic poet, during the reign of the Athenian democracy, has not been unaptly compared to that of the courtjester during the middle ages. They were both of them authorized to take the most extraordinary liberties, in reflections on the sovereign, and the highest persons in the state; but theirs was a situation obviously incompatible with the exercise of any other office or privilege. The parallel may be carried further; for it would appear, from many recorded instances, that of these royal jesters many must have been men, not only of a lively fancy and imagination, but of just feelings and a sound judgement, whose privileged sallies occasionally directed the attention of the sovereign to truths, which could not have been conveyed to him by any other channel. Aristophanes was certainly a most judicious, though ineffectual, adviser to the multitudinous sovereign, whom it was his office to amuse, and Charles of Burgundy might have lived and died in prosperity, if his counsels had been moderated by the sarcasms of his jester

But to return to our subject Thus far. in the absence of direct and positive information, an attempt has been made, by conjecture and inference, to define the new position, in which the Poet was placing himself, as a member of the community to which he belonged, whether in this respect he had any reason to repent of his resolution, it would be idle and superfluous to risk any conjecture,but in regard to his success as an author, the forebodings expressed in the parabasis appear to have been verified -Up to this time, while unengaged and at liberty, he had been courted by the public, and indulged with applause and success, for the strong feeling exc.ted in the public by his play of the Babylonians, at first hostile, and gradually (like their representatives, the chorus of Acharmans) subsiding into acquiescence and approbation, must have been felt as more than an equivalent to the highest theatrical success. But he was now irrevocably engaged in the service of the public, the first prize, as a kind of premium for enlisting, was awarded to the present play, the first which he exhibited as a regular writer for the stage. but from this time he was destined, like his predecessors, to experience the rigours and caprices of theatrical disciphne His next play was the Clouds, in which, following up the design of the Daitaleis, he had traced to its source that sudden change in morality and manners, of which the outward manifestations had been exhilited in the former play This play of the Clouds, which he affirms (adjuring Bacchins as the patron deity of theatrical poets) to have been the best that ever was written, was rejected The play of the Wasps, in which he thus asserted the merit of the Clouds, was acted in the following year, and obtained the first prize. But we find that another mortification had, in the meanwhile, befalen him, in the diminished zeal and ardour of his friends,—he had been, as the phrase is, 'had up' by Cleon before the senate, and subjected to the infliction of a severe invective, during which time he complains that his friends and partisans who were in attendance, and upon whose countenance he depended, 'had shown themselves indifferent and even amused '-They imagined, no doubt, that being once engaged he must go on But he tells them, that he does not mean to compromise himself to the same extent in fature, and reminds them of the fable of the vine, which, being left unsupported, ceased to produce fruit (1 1291).

So (the story says) the stake descried and betray'd the vine.

Hore, then, we trace a turn in the Poet's mind, he became less of a public personage, and though his fancy and wit remained the same, and his principles continued unchanged, and though his courage and spirit occasionally broke forth in public emergencies, yet having adopted the stage as his occupation, he approached more nearly to the common standard of theatrical writers, and he might have made the same complaint, which was uttered by Shakespeare

So that almost my nature is subdued To what it works in, like the dyer's hand

But the text is already too much ologged with this long interpolation of prose. We will not stop, therefore, to lament over the loss of the Daitaleis and the Babylonians, composed at an earlier period, and with an unbroken spirit.

But the money-loving spirit of our age manifests itself even in our literary researches, and we cannot refrain, even with respect to an ancient poet, who lived 2,300 years ago, from the invariable inquiry—If hat was he worth?—It may be inferred then, from grounds of presumption too long to be detailed here, that he must have belonged to the class of the knights Now the knights were rated (according to the modus fixed by Solon) at an amount of 300 bushels of corn But how rated?—As for the sum total of their income? Or, as being that portion of it, which, in cases of emergency, was exigible for the service of the state ?-Those students of antiquity, who are not endowed with the faculty of digesting gross absurdities, are under great obligations to Mr. Boeckh, for having relieved them from the cruel necessity of being constrained to believe, that a man with £75 a year (taking corn at five shillings a bushel) was bound to keep a warhorse, and to serve in the cavalry at his own expense; or that another with an income of £225 (estimated according to the same permanent standard of value) could have been charged with the expenses of a ship of war—a proposition, we conceive, wholly contradictory to the experience of the members of the Yacht Club -Mr Boeckh has shown, that these sums were the extreme rates of taxation to which the individuals of these classes were subject; a rate which was not always exacted in full; and which we may suppose, at the utmost, to have been a double tithe, or four shillings in the pound, a rate of taxation to which, in difficult times, our own country was contented to submit. -The elucidation of this point is by far the greatest service which Mr. Boeckh has rendered to ancient literature. in the whole of his accurate and learned work. To have dissipated these misapprehensions, which, as long as they were implicitly adopted, diffused an air of utter incredibility and unreality over the whole system of antiquity, is a result far more important than the development of details hitherto unknown and unexamined.

This discussion, already too long, has been prolonged thus far for the sake of restating Mr Boeckh's discovery, which has been unaccountably overlooked in a recent publication

With respect to the poet, we may safely conclude, that he was in tolerably easy circumstances, and we find, accordingly, that he was able to give away some of his plays with their contingent emoluments among the rest the very play (the Frogs) in which he complained of the new retrenchment, and denounced an anathema against the economists.

PARABASTS.

If a veteran author had wished to engage Our assistance to day, for a speech from the stage, We scarce should have granted so bold a request, But this author of ours, as the bravest and best, Deserves an indulgence denied to the rest. For the courage and vigour, the scorn and the hate, With which he encounters the pests of the state, A thorough bred seaman, intrepid and warm, Steering outright, in the face of the storm.

But now for the gentle reproaches he bore On the part of his friends, for refraining before To embrace the profession, embarking for life

In theatrical storms and poetical strife

He begs us to state, that for reasons of weight, He has linger'd so long, and determined so late For he deem'd the achievements of comedy hard, The boldest attempt of a desperate bard! The Muse he perceived was capricious and coy, Though many were courting her, few could enjoy And he saw without reason, from season to season, Your humour would shift, and turn poets adrift, Requiting old friends with unkindness and treason, Discarded in scorn as exhausted and worn.

Seeing Magnes's fate, who was reckon'd of late,
For the conduct of comedy, captain and head,
That so oft on the stage, in the flower of his age,
Had defeated the Chorus his rivals had led,
With his sounds of all sort, that were utter'd in sport,
With whims and vagaries unheard of before,
With feathers and wings, and a thousand gay things,
That in frolicsome fancies his Choruses wore——When his humour was spent, did your temper relent.

To requite the delight that he gave you before?

—We beheld him displaced, and expell'd, and disgraced,

When his hair and his wit were grown aged and hoar

Then he saw, for a sample, the dismal example Of noble Cratinus so splendid and ample, Full of spirit and blood, and enlarged like a flood, Whose copious current tore down, with its torrent, Oaks, ashes, and yew, with the ground where they grew, And his rivals to boot, wrench'd up by the root, And his personal foes, who presumed to oppose,
All drown'd and abolish'd, dispersed and demolish'd,
And drifted headlong, with a deluge of song
And his airs, and his tunes, and his songs and lampoons.

Were recited and sung, by the old and the young-At feasts and carousals what poet but he? And 'The fair Amphibribe' and 'The Sycophant Tree', 'Masters and masons and builders of verse!'-Those were the tunes that all tongues could rehearse; But since in decay, you have cast him away, Stripp'd of his stops and his musical strings, Batter'd and shatter'd, a broken old instrument, Shoved out of sight, among rubbishy things His garlands are faded, and what he deems worst, His tongue and his palate are parching with thirst; And now you may meet him alone in the street, Wearied and worn, tatter'd and torn, All decay'd and forlorn, in his person and dress; Whom his former success should exempt from distress, With subsistence at large, at the general charge, And a seat with the great, at the table of state,1 There to feast every day, and preside at the play In splendid apparel, triumphant and gay.

Seeing Crates the next, always teased and perplext, With your tyrannous temper, tormented and vext; That with taste and good sense, without waste or expense.

From his snug little hoard, provided your board,
With a delicate treat, economic and neat.
Thus hitting or missing, with crowns or with hissing,
Year after year, he pursued his career, For better or worse, till he finish'd his course.

¹ The Prytaneum.

These precedents held him in long hesitation, He replied to his friends, with a just observation, 'That a seaman in regular order is bred To the ear,—to the helm,—and to look out a head, Till diligent practice has fix'd in his mind The signs of the weather, and changes of wind. And when every point of the service is known, Undertakes the command of a ship of his own.'

For reasons like these,
If your judgement agrees,
That he did not embark,
Like an ignorant spark,
Or a troublesome lout,
To puzzle and bother, and blunder about,
Give him a shout,
At his first setting out!
And all pull away
With a hearty huzza
For success to the play!
Send him away,
Smiling and gay,
Shining and florid,
With his bald forehead!

The text contains noarly all that is known of two of tho three poets here mentioned, Magnes and Crates, the last is recorded, as having become distinguished in the second year of the 82nd Olymp, thirty-six years before the exhibition of the Knights, Magnes must have been older Of Cratinus some few fragments are still in existence, he lived to vindicate himself from the offensive commiscration here bestowed upon him, by gaining the first prize in the next year, when the comedy of the Clouds was rejected

STROPHE.

Neptune, lord of land and deep, From the lofty Suman steep, With delight surveying The fiery footed steeds, Frolicking and neighing As their humour leads-—And rapid cars contending Venturous and forward. Where splendid youths are spending The money that they borrow'd. -Thence downward to the Ocean. And the calmer show Of the dolphin's motion In the depths below: And the glittering galleys Gallantly that steer, When the squadron sallies, With wages in arrear. List, O list! Listen and assist. Thy Chorus here! Mighty Saturn's son! The support of Phormion 1, In his victories of late. To the fair Athenian State More propitious far, Than all the gods that are, In the present war

EPIRRHEMA

Let us praise our famous fathers, let their glory be recorded

On Minerva's mighty mantle ² consecrated and embroider'd.

That with many a naval action and with infantry by land,

Still contending, never ending, strove for empire and command.

A most able and successful naval commander

² This mantle was an enormous piece of tapestry, adorned with the actions and figures of the native heroes and protecting deities. It was renewed every year, and was carried to the temple, at the Panathenaic procession, suspended and displayed from a tall mast fixed on a movable carriage. See Mr. Wordsworth's Attica, p. 184.

When they met the foe, disdaining to compute a poor account

Of the number of their armies, of their muster and

But whene'er at wrestling matches, they were worsted in the fray.

Wiped their shoulders from the dust, denied the fall, and fought away Then the generals 2 never claimed precedence, or a separate seat. Like the present mighty captains, or the public wine or meat. As for us, the sole pretension suited to our birth and vears. Is with resolute intention, as determined volun-

To defend our fields and altars, as our fathers did before.

Claiming as a recompense this easy boon, and nothing more

When our trials with peace are ended, not to view us with malignity, When we're curried, sleek and pamper'd, prancing in our pride and dignity

ANTISTROPHIL

It will be seen that there is a want of correspondence and propertien between the strophe and antistropho the first has been onlarged to give scepe for the development of the poetic imagery, tinged with burleague which appears in the original. In atonement for this irregulanty, the antistrophe, which offered no such temptation, is given as an exact metrical facsimile of the original. In this

Tolmide and Myronkles, who commanded in the battles here alluded to

¹ Thirty two years before this time, the Athenians, after being foiled in a great battle at Tanagra, risked another general action at Oinophuta, in which they were victorious, only sixty two days after the first 1—Fasti Hellenics, Ol. 81

respect, it may at least have some merit as a currosity. The only variation consists in a triple, instead of a double, rime

Mighty Minerva! thy command Rules and upholds this happy land; Attıca, famed in every part, With a renown for arms and art, Noted among the nations Victory bring—the bard's delight; She that in faction or in fight,

Aids us on all occasions

Goddess, list to the song '-Bring her away with thee, Haste and bring her along !-Here to the play with thee

> Bring fair Victory down for us! Bring her here with a crown for us! Come with speed, as a friend indeed, Now or never at our need!

Antepirrhema.

It is observable, that the antepirrhema is generally in a lower and less serious tone than its preceding epirrhema; as if the poet were, or thought it right to appear, apprehensive of having been over-earnest in his first address In the present instance, as the poetical advocate of his party. he had already stated their claims to public confidence and favour; and, in the concluding lines, had deprecated the realousy and envy to which they were exposed He now wishes to give a striking instance of their spirit and alacrity in the service of the country; and it is given accordingly, in the most uninvidious manner, in a tone of extravagant burlesque humour.

Let us sing the mighty deeds of our illustrious noble steeds

They deserve a celebration for their service heretofore, Charges and attacks, exploits enacted in the days of yore:

These, however, strike me less, as having been perform'd ashore

But the wonder was to see them, when they fauly went aboard.

With canteens and bread and onions, victuall'd and completely stored,

Then they fix'd and dipp'd their oars beginning all to shout and neigh.

Just the same as human creatures, 'Pull away, boys !

Pull away!'

'Bear a hand there, Roan and Sorrel! Have a care there, Black and Bay!'

Then they leapt ashore at Counth, and the lustier younger sort

Stroll'd about to pick up litter,1 for their solace and disport

And devour'd the crabs of Corinth, as a substitute for clover

So that a poetic Crabbe, exclaim'd in anguish, 'All is over i

'What awaits us, mighty Neptune, if we cannot hope

From pursuit and persecution in the land or in the deep ? '

The poet Carkinus (Crab) had produced a tragedy, on the subject of the daughter of a king of Corinth, who, merely from bathing in the sea, had become unconsciously pregnant by Neptune

The lines here quoted from it were of illustrious families, from the licentious aggressions of the gods.

CHOR. (to the SAUSAGE SELLER.) O best of men! thou tightest, heartiest fellow! What a terror and alarm had you created, In the hearts of all your friends, by this delay But since at length, in safety, you return, Say what was the result of your attempt.

Say The result is, you may call me Nickoboulus.

For I've nick'd the Boule there, the Senate, capitally

¹ The usual licentious excesses of an invading army ² The poet Carkinus.

CHORUS.

Then may we chant amain
In an exulting strain,
With ecstasy triumphant, bold, and high,
O Thou!

That not in words alone, or subtle thought, But more in manly deed,

Hast merited, and to fair achievement brought! Relate at length and tell

The event as it befell:

So would I gladly pass a weary way;

Nor weary would it seem, Attending to the theme,

Of all the glories of this happy day.
(In a familiar tone, as if clapping him on the shoulder.)
Come, my jolly, worthy fellow, never fear!

We're all delighted with you—let us hear!

S S Aye, aye—at 's well worth hearing, I can tell ve:

I follow'd after him to the senate-house; And there was he, storming, and roaring, driving His thunderbolts about him, bowling down His biggest words, to crush the cavaliers, Like stones from a hill-top; calling them traitors, Conspirators—What not? There sat the senate With their arms folded, and their eyebrows bent, And their lips pucker'd, with the grave aspect Of persons utterly humbugg'd and bamboozled.

Seeing the state of things, I paused awhile, Praying in secret with an under-voice.

'Ye influential impudential powers
Of sauciness and jabber, slang and jaw!
Ye spirits of the market-place and street
Where I was rear'd and bred—befriend me now!
Grant me a voluble utterance, and a vast

¹ The encouragement which the poet administers, to himself in fact, is not out of place, he is preparing to attack the senate, with the most contemptuous ridicule

Unbounded voice, and steadfast impudence!'
Whilst I thus thought and pray'd, on the right hand,

I heard a sound of wind distinctly broken'
I seized the omen at once, and bouncing up,
I burst among the crowd, and bustled through,
And bolted in at the wicket, and bawl'd out
'News! news! I've brought you news! the best of

Yes, Senators, since first the war began, There never has been known, till now this morning, Such a haul of pilchards' Then they smiled and seem'd

All tranquilized and placid at the prospect Of pilehards being likely to be cheap I then proceeded and proposed a vote To meet the emergence secretly and suddenly To seize at once the trays of all the workmen, And go with them to market to buy pilehards, Before the price was raised. Immediately They applauded, and sat gaping altogether, Attentive and admiring He perceived it, And framed a motion, suited, as he thought, To the temper of the assembly—'I move,' says he, 'That on occasion of this happy news, We should proclaim a general thanksgiving, With a festival, moreover, and a sacrifice Of a hundred head of oxen, to the goddess'

Then seeing he meant to drive me to the wall With his hundred oxen, I overbid him at once, And said 'two hundred', and proposed a vow, 'For a thousand goats to be offer'd to Diana, Whenever sprats should fall to forty a penny' With that the senate smiled upon me again, And he grew stupefied, and lost, and stammering, And, attempting to interrupt the current business, Was call'd to order, and silenced and put down.

Then they were breaking up to buy their pilehards But he must needs persist, and beg for a hearing—

For a single moment—for a messenger—

For a herald that was come from Lacedaemon, With an offer of peace—for an audience to be given him'

But they broke out in an uproar altogether: Peace, truly !- Peace, forsooth !- Yes, now 's their

I warrant 'em; when pilchards are so plenty They've heard of it; and now they come for peace! No! No! No peace! The war must take its course! Then they call'd out to the presidents to adjourn; And scrambled over the railing and dispersed; And I dash'd down to the market-place headlong; And bought up all the fennel, and bestow'd it, As donative, for garnish to their pilchards, Among the poorer class of senators; And they so thank'd and prais'd me, that, in short, For twenty-pence, I've purchased and secured them.

Сновия.

With fair event your first essay began Betokening a predestined happy man.

The villain now shall meet

In equal war, A more accomplish'd cheat,

A viler far,

With turns and tricks more various, More artful and nefamous

-But thou!

Bethink thee now:

Rouse up thy spirit to the next endeavour!

-Our hands, and hearts, and will,

Both heretofore and ever,

Are with thee still

S S The Paphlagonian! Here he's coming. foaming

And swelling like a breaker in the surf! With his hobgoblin countenance and look: For all the world as if he'd swallow me up

Enter CLEON

CLEON May I perish and rot, but I'll consume and ruin ye,

I'll leave no trick, no scheme untried to do it.

S S It makes me laugh, it amuses one, to see him Bluster and storm !- I whistle and snap my fingers CLEON By the powers of earth and heaven ! and as I live!

You villain. I'll annihilate and devour ve

Devour me! and as I live, I'll swallow ye, And gulp ye down at a mouthful, without salt.

CLEON I swear by the precedence, and the seat

Which I achieved at Pylos, I'll destroy ye.

S S Seat, precedence truly! I hope to see you, The last amongst us in the lowest place.

CLEON I'll clap you in jail, in the stocks-By Heaven! I will

S S To see how it takes on! Barking and tearing What ails the creature? Does it want a sop? CLEON I'll claw your guts out with these nails of

S S I'll pare those nails of yours, from clawing

victuals At the public table

I'll drag you to the assembly CLEON

This instant, and acouse ye, and have you punish'd. S S And I'll bring accusations there against you.

Twenty for one, and worse than yours tenfold CLEON Aye-my poor soul! but they won't mind ye or hear ye,

Whilst I can manage 'em and make fools of 'em. S S You reckon they belong to ye, I suppose? CLEON Why should not they, if I feed and diet

'em ? S S Aye, aye, and like the liquorish greedy nurses, You swallow ten for one yourself, at least,

lor every morsel the poor creatures get,

CLEON Moreover, in doing business in the assembly.

I have such a superior influence and command, That I can make them close and hard and dry, Or pass a matter easily, as I please.

S'S Moreover, in doing business, my backside

Has the same sort of influence and command. And plays at fast and loose, just as it pleases CLEON. You shan't insult me as you did before the senate.

Come, come, before the assembly

S. S (coolly and drily.) Aye, yes; why not? With all my heart! Let's go there; what should hinder us?

[The scene is supposed to be in front of Demus's

CLEON My dear good Demus, do step out a moment '

S S My dearest little Demus, do step out!

DEM. Who's there? Keep off! What a racket are you making;

Bawling and caterwauling about the door To affront the house, and scandalize the neighbours CLEON. Come out, do see yourself, how I'm insulted. DEM. Oh my poor Paphlagonian! What's the matter?

Who has affronted ye?

CLEON I'm waylaid and beaten. By that rogue there, and the rake-helly young fellows, All for your sake

DEM How so?

CLEON. Because I love you, And court you, and wait on you, to win your favour DEM. And you there, sirrah! Tell me, what are you?

S S (very rapidly and eagerly.)

A lover of yours, and a rival of his, this long time; That have wish'd to oblige ye and serve ye in every

And many there are besides, good gentlefolks, That adore ye, and wish to pay their court to ye; But he contrives to battle and drive them off, In short, you're like the silly spendthrift heirs.

That keep away from civil well bred company, To pass their time with grooms and low companions, Cobblers, and curriers, tanners and such like CLEON And have not I merited that preference,

By my service?

In what way?

By bringing back CLEON

The Spartan captives tied and bound from Pylos
S S And would not I bring back from the cook's goda

A mess of meat that belonged to another man? CLEON Well, Demus, call an assembly then directly, To decide between us, which is your best friend, And when you've settled it, fix and keep to him Exit CLEON

SS Ah do! pray do decide!-but not in the

Pnyx--

DEM It must be there, it can't be anywhere else, It's quite impossible you must go to the Pnyx. S S Oh dear! I'm lost and ruin'd then! the old fellow Is sharp and clever enough in his own home,

But planted with his rump upon that rock, He grows completely stupefied and bother'd.

CHORUS

Now you must get your words and wit, and all your tackle ready.

To make a dash, but don't be rash, be watchful, bold. and steady

You've a nimble adversary, shifting, and alert, and warv

[The scene changes and discovers the Pnyx with CLEON on the Bema, in an orational attitude Look out! have a care! behold him there!

¹ Observe that the change of the scene is accompanied by the idea of naval manœuvre. The ancient theatres being open at top, the machinery was worked from below, so that, with the help of a little imagination, the stage might at such a moment be thought to resemble the deck of a ship Observe too, that as

He's bearing upon you—be ready, prepare. Out with the Dolphin! Haul it hard! Away with it up to the peak of the yard! And out with the punace 1 to serve for a guard.

Cleon's evordium appears to be marked in the original by a trait of humour, which it is impossible to translate or to represent by an equivalent. The true version is as follows. I pray to the goddess Minerva, my own patroness, and the protecting deity of the city; that if I stand as a meritorious statesman, in the next rank to Lysicles, Cynna and Salabaccha, I may be allowed to continue dining in the Prytaneum, &c, &c

It should seem that the three discreditable names are substituted for those of Pericles, Cymon and Themistocles, with whom it appears that Cleon was in the habit of comparing himself, for we shall see that in the present scene he is attacked for having presumed to place himself in parallel with Themistocles

It is natural therefore to conclude that with respect to the two other illustrious, but less extraordinary characters, he must have felt still less scrupulous.

by the change of scene and its transfer to the Pnyx (which had been deprecated by the Sausage-seller) the advantage is supposed to be transferred to the less ignoble character, the metre changes from the tetrameter nambic to the anapaest, as in the scenes of altercation in the other comedies, where the ascendancy of the noble or ignoble personage or argument is marked by a change of the metre; though the scenes which follow may perhaps be considered as an exception; for the Sausage-seller has the better even in the anapaest, but his complete triumph is reserved for the tetrameter

¹ The image is that of a merchant vessel defending itself against the attack of a ship of war the pinnace was interposed to break the shock of the enemy's prow, and the dolphin, a huge mass of lead, was raised to a great height, at the end of the yard of the enormous lateen sail (still to be seen in some large old-fashioned craft in the Mediterranean). It was then dropt suddenly at the moment of contact, to sink the enemy's vessel by bursting a hole through it

² A statesman of very low repute, who had come forward after the death of Pericles, but speedily sunk into discredit. See

'ootnote, p 88

Two eminent prostitutes.

The phrase therefore stands as a contemptuous caricature of Cleon's arrogance. He had spoken of himself as the most mentorious public character μετά Περικλία και Κίμωνα και Θεμιστοκλία.

The taunting paredy of the Peet says

μετά Λυσικλέα και Κυνναν και Σαλαβάκχω

Wo see that the first two names have a similarity in sound to those for which they were substituted (Pericles, Lysicles—Cymon, Cynna) And we may be sure that an exact mimicry of Cleon's manner, and tone of voice, would not have been wanting, to make the caricature as manifest

as possible

To those who have formed a just estimate of the merits of Aristophanes, this explanation of the passage will not appear unnecessary. It occurs in the most striking part of the play, at the very point to which the attention of the audience had heen directed, but surely the most implicit admiration for overything ancient cannot prevent us from perceiving, that, unexplained as it has been hitherto, it appears vapid and senseless in the extreme. We might safely defy the dullest individual to make a poorer attempt at a joke in his own person.

If, on the contrary, we suppose the passage in question to have contained a verbal burlesque heightened by personal mimicry, the audience would hardly have felt a deficiency of amusement at this particular point of the representation.

CLEON To Minerva the sovereign goddess I call, Our guide and defender, the hope of us all, With a prayer and a vow,—That even as now—If I'm truly your friend, unto my life's end, I may dine in the hall, doing nothing at all! But if I despise you, or ever advise you, Against what is best, for your comfort and rest, Or neglect to attend you, defend you, befriend you,—May I perish and pine, may this carcase of mine Be wither'd and dried, and curried beside,

And straps for your harness out out from the hide

S S Then Demus-if I tell a word of a lie,

If any man more can dote or adore.

With so tender a care, I make it my prayer,
My prayer and my wish,—to be stew'd in a dish;
To be sliced and slash'd, minced and hash'd,
And the offal remains that are left by the cook,
Dragg'd out to the grave, with my own flesh-hook
CLEON O Demus! has any man shown such a zeal,

Such a passion as I for the general weal?

Racking and screwing offenders to ruin;
With torture and threats extorting your debts;
Exhausting all means for enhancing your fortune,
Terror and force and intreaties importune,
With a popular, pure, patriotical aim,
Unmoved by compassion, or friendship, or shame.

S S All this I can do, more handily too; With ease and dispatch; I can pilfer and snatch, And supply ye with loaves from another man's batch.

But now, to detect his saucy neglect,
(In spite of the boast of his loyalty, due
Is the boil'd and the roast to your table and you)
—You; that in combat at Marathon sped,
And hew'd down your enemies hand over head,
The Mede and the Persian, achieving a treasure
Of infinite honour and profit and pleasure,
Rhetorical praises and tragical phrases;
Of rich panegyric a capital stock—
—He leaves you to rest on a seat of the rock,
Naked and bare, without comfort or care.
Whilst I—Look ye there '—have quilted and wadded,
And tufted and padded this cushion so neat
To serve for your seat! Rise now, let me slip
It there under your hip, that on board of the ship,
With the toil of the oar, was blister'd and sore,
Enduring the burthen and heat of the day,
At the battle of Salamis working away.

Dev. Whence was it you came! Oh tell me your

Your name and your birth; for your kindness and worth

Bespeak you indeed of a patriot breed;

Of the race of Harmodius 1 sure you must be, So popular, gracious and friendly to me CLEON Can he win you with case, with such trifles as these?

S S With easier trifles you manage to please CLEON I vow notwithstanding, that never a man Has acted since first the republic began, On a more patriotical popular plan And if any man else can as truly be said The friend of the people, I'll forfeit my head, I'll make it a wager, and stand to the pledge.

S S And what is the token you mean to allege

Of that friendship of yours, or the good it ensures?

—Eight seasons are past that he shelters his head
In a barrack, an outhouse, a hovel, a shed,
In nests of the rock where the vultures are bred,
In tubs, and in huts and the towers of the wall
His friend and protector, you witness it all!
But where is thy pity, thou friend of the city,
To smoke him alive, to plunder his hive?
And when Archeptolemus? came on a mission,
With peace in his hand, with a fair proposition
So drive them before you with kicks on the rump,
Peace, treaties and embassies, all in a lump!

CLEON I did wisely and well, for the prophecies tell.

That if he perseveres, for a period of years, He shall sit in Arcadia, judging away In splendour and honour, at fivepence a day—Meantime I can feed and provide for his need, Maintaining him wholly, fairly and foully, With jurymen's pay, threepence a day

S S No vision or fancy prophetic have you, Nor dreams of Arcadian empire in view, A safer concealment is all that you seek In the hubbub of war, in the darkness and reek, To plunder at large, to keep him confined.

* After the surrender of the Spartans at Pylos

¹ The assassin of Hipparchus, canonized by the democratic fanaticism of the Athenians.

Passive, astounded, humbled, blind,
Pining in penury, looking to thee
For his daily provision, a juryman's fee.

—But if he returns to his country concerns,
His grapes and his figs, and his furmity kettle,
You'll find him a man of a different mettle
When he feels that your fees had debarr'd him from these.

He'll trudge up to town, looking eagerly down,
And pick a choice pebble, and keep it in view,
As a token of spite 1, for a vote against you —
—Peace sinks you for ever, you feel it and know,
As your shifts and your tricks and your prophecies show

CLEON. 'Tis a scandal, a shame! to throw slander and blame

On the friend of the people! a patriot name, A kinder protector, I venture to say, Than ever Themistocles was in his day, Better and kinder in every way

S S Witness, ye deities! witness his blasphemies! You to compare with Themistocles! you! That found us exhausted, and fill'd us anew With a bumper of opulence, carving and sharing Rich slices of empire; and kindly preparing, While his guests were at dinner, a capital supper, With a dainty remove, both under and upper, The fort and the harbour, and many a dish Of colonies, islands, and such kind of fish But now we are stunted, our spirit is blunted, With paltry defences, and walls of partition,

^{1 &#}x27;As a token of spite' that is, as a memorandum of anticipated vengeance. It is recorded of some old Frenchman, in the early times of the last century, that having suffered in his fortune by the depreciation of the coinage, he set apart a gold piece of the old stamp; and used to show it to his friends, saying 'that he kept it for the hire of a balcony looking into the Place de Grève, against the time, when the minister should be brought out there for execution'—With a similar feeling the Athenian countryman is described as selecting his pebble for a future vindictive vote against Cleon

With silly pretences of poor superstition, And yet you can dare with him to compare! But he lost the command, and was banish'd the land, While you rule over all, and carouse in the hall!

CLEON This is horrible quite, and his slanderous spite

Has no motive in view but my friendship for you, Mv zeal-

There, have done with your slang and your DEM stroff.

You've cheated and choused and caloled me enough S S My dear little Demus! you'll find it is true. He behaves like a wretch and a villain to you He benaves like a wretch and a vinin w y
He haunts your garden and there he plies,
Cropping the sprouts of the young supplies,
Munching and erunching enormous rations
Of public sales and confiscations.
CLEON Don't exult before your time,

Before you've answer'd for your crime,— A notable theft, that I mean to prove, Of a hundred talents and above.

S S Why do ye plounce and flounce in vain? Splashing and dashing and splashing again, Like a silly recruit, just clapp'd on board? Your crimes and acts are on record The Mytilenian bribe alone Was forty minae proved and shown.

CHORUS 1

O thou, the saviour of the state, with joy and admira

We contemplate your happy fate and future exaltation, Doom'd with the trident in your hand to reign in power and glory, In full career to domineer, to drive the world before

¹ The metre now passes from the anapaest to the tetrameter lambic. See p 100 note.

To raise with ease and calm the seas, and also raise a fortune.

While distant tribes, with gifts and bribes, to thee will be resorting.

Keep your advantage, persevere, attack him, work him, bait him,

You'll over-bawl him, never fear, and out-vociferate

CLEON You'll not advance; you've not a chance, good people, of prevailing;

Recorded facts, my warlike acts, will muzzle you from railing;

As long as there remains a shield of all the trophy taken

At Pylos, I can keep the field, unterrified, unshaken. S S Stop there a bit, don't triumph yet,—those shields afford a handle

For shrewd surmise, and it implies a treasonable scandal;

That there they're placed, all strapp'd and braced, ready prepared for action;

A plot it is i a scheme of his! a project of the faction!
—Dear Demus, he, most wickedly, with villainous advisement,

Prepares a force, as his resource, against your just chastisement

—The curriers and the tanners all, with sundry crafts of leather,

Young lusty fellows stout and tall, you see them leagued together;

And there beside them there abide cheesemongers bold and hearty.

Who with the grocers are allied, to join the tanners' party

-Then if you turn your oyster eye, with ostracizing look.

Those his allies will from the pegs those very shields unbook:

Rushing outright, at dark midnight, with insurrection sudden,

To seize perforce the public stores, with all your meal and pudden.

DEM Well I declare the straps are there! Oh

what a deep, surprising,

Uncommon rascal! What a plot the wretch has been devising

CLEON Hear and attend, my worthy friend, and don't directly credit

A tale for truth, because, forsooth—'The man that told me, said it.'

-You'll never see a friend like me that well or ill rewarded.

Has uniformly done his best to keep you safely guarded. Watching and working night and day, with infinite detections

Of treasons and conspiracies, and plots in all directions. S S Yes, that's your course, your sole resource. the same device for ever

As country fellows fishing eels, that in the quiet river.

Or the clear lake, have fail'd to take, begin to poke and muddle.

And rouge and rout it all about and work it to a puddle To eatch their game-you do the same in the hubbub and confusion.

Which you create to blind the state, with unobserved collusion.

Grasping at ease your bribes and fees But answer! Tell me whether

You, that pretend yourself his friend, with all your wealth in leather,

Ever supplied a single hide, to mend his reverend batter'd

Old buskins?

Dem No, not he, by Jove! Look at them, burst and tatter'd!

S S That shows the man! now spick and span, behold my noble largess!

A lovely pair, bought for your wear, at my own cost and charges.

DEM I see your mind is well inclined, with views and temper suiting,

To place the state of things and toes upon a proper footing

CLEON. What an abuse! a pair of shoes to purchase

Whilst all my worth is blotted forth, razed from your recollection,

That was your guide, so proved and tried, that show'd myself so zealous,

And so severe this very year, and of your honour realous.

Noting betimes all filthy crimes, without respect or pity. S. S. He that 's inclin'd to filth, may find enough throughout the city.

—A different view determined you; those infamous offenders

Seem'd in your eyes likely to rise aspirants and pre-

In bold debate, and ready prate, undaunted rhetoricians.

In impudence and influence, your rival politicians But there now, see! this winter he might pass without his clothing,

The season's cold, he's chilly and old, but still you think of nothing !

Whilst I to show my love, bestow this waistcoat, as Comely and new, with sleeves thereto, of flannel warm and pleasant.

DEM How strange it is! Themistocles was reckon'd

With all his wit, he could not hit on such a project

Such a device, so warm, so nice; in short, it equals

His famous wall, the port and all, that he contrived so rarely.

CLEON To what a pass you drive me, alas! to what

'Lis your own plan, 'twas you began -As topers at a revel.

Press'd on a sudden, rise at once, and seize without regarding

Their neighbour's slippers for the nonce, to turn into the garden

I stand in short upon your shoes-I copy your behaviour.

And take and use, for my own views, your flattery and palaver

I shall outvie your flatteries, I !- see here CLEON

this costly favour!

This mantle! take it for my sake-

Faugh! what a DEM filthy flavour!

Off with it quick! it makes me sick, it stinks of hides and leather

S S 'Twas by design If you'll combine and put the facts together,

Like his device of Sliphium spice-pretending to bedizen

You with the dress! 'Twas nothing less, than an attempt to poison He sunk the price of that same spice, and with the same intention.

-You recollect?

DEM I recollect the circumstance you mention.

S S Then recollect the sad effect !- that instance of the jury

All flush'd and hot, fix'd to the spot, exploding in a fury

To see them was a scene of woo, in that infectious smother.

Winking and blinking in a row, and poisoning one another

CLEON Varlet and knave! thou dirty slave! what trash 1 have you collected ?

A reprimand which in this, and one or two other instances the translator is tempted to transfer to himself!

S S. 'Tis your own cue—I copy you —So the oracle directed

CLEON I'll match you still, for I can fill his pintpot of appointment,

For holidays and working days 1

SS But here's a box of outment-A salve prescribed for heels when kibed, given with my humble duty

CLEON I'll pick your white hairs out of sight, and make you quite a beauty

S S But here's a prize for your dear eyes!—a rabbit-scut! See there now!

CLEON. Wipe'em, and then wipe it again, dear

Demus, on my hair now.

S S. On mine, I say! On mine do, pray!

Demus bestows, in a careless manner, his dirty pre-ference upon the S S He pays no attention to the altercation which follows between the two rivals, but remains in the attitude of a solid old juryman sitting upon a difficult cause, concocting the decision which he at last

CLEON. I shall fit you with a ship, To provide for and equip One that has been long forgotten, Leaky, worm-eaten and rotten On it you shall waste and spend Time and money without end. Furthermore, if I prevail, It shall have a rotten sail. CHOR

There he's foaming, boiling over: See the froth above the cover. This combustion to allay, We must take some sticks away.

I shall bring you down to ruin,

I Donatives on festival days, when the Courts were closed and the jurymen's pay suspended

With my summoning and suing For arrears of taxes due. And charges and assessments new, In the eensus you shall pass Rated in the richest class I reply with nothing worse Than this just and righteous curse -May you stand beside the stove.1 With the fishes that you love, Fizzling in the tempting pan, A distracted anxious man, The Milesian question 2 pending, Which you then should be defending, With a talent for your hire If you gain what they desire .--Then their agent, in a sweat, Comes to say the assembly 's met, All in haste you snatch and follow, And in vain attempt to swallow. Running with your gullet fill'd, Till we see you choked and kill'd. So be it, mighty Jove! so be it! And, holy Ceres, may I live to see it!

CHOR

Dem (rousing himself gradually from his meditation.)
In truth, and he seems to me by far the best—
The worthiest that has been long since—the kindest,
And best disposed to the honest, sober class
Of simple humble three penny citizens—
—You Paphlagonian, on the contrary,
Have offended and incensed me—Therefore now
Give back your seal of office!—You must be
No more my steward!—

CLEON Take it! and withal Bear this in mind! That he my successor

--Whoever he may be—will prove a rascal

The Schollast affords us no light as to the allusion to the Milesian question

¹ It is to be presumed that Cleon is indulging himself in the Prytaneum

More artful and nefamous than myself-A bigger rogue, be sure, and baser far! DEM. This seal is none of mine, or my eyes deceive me!

The figure's not the same, I'm sure! S S.

Let's see-

What was the proper emblem upon your seal?

DEM A sirloin of roast beef-

SS It is not that!

DEM. Not the roast beef! What is it? SS

A cormorant

Harangung open-mouth'd upon a rock—1

SS. What's the matter?

DEM. Away with it!

That was Cleonymus's seal, not mine—2

But here, take this; act with it as my steward CLEON Not yet, sir, I beseech you! First permit me

To communicate some oracles I possess

S S And me too, some of mine -CLEON.

Beware of them!

His oracles are most dangerous and infectious!
They strike ye with the leprosy and the jaundice
S S And his will give you the itch and a scald head,

And the glanders and mad-staggers! take my word

CLEON My oracles foretell, that you shall rule Over all Greece, and wear a crown of roses

S S And mine foretell, that you shall wear a robe With golden spangles, and a crown of gold, And ride in a golden chariot over Thrace, and bring 'em! and let him hear 'em!

In triumph with King Smicythes and his queen — CLEON (to the SAUSAGE-SELLER) Well, go for 'em!

The Pnyx, the place of assembly, was called the Rock ² Cleonymus's emblem is a bird, to mar his cowardice—See Ach, p 10, 1 112—The bird is also one of voracious habits

Cleon affects to give orders, which the S S retorts S S Yes, sure—and you too—go fetch yours! CLEON Heigh day! SS Heigh day! Why should not ye? What should hinder ve?

Exeunt CLEON and SAUSAGE SELLER.

The following Chorus has no merit whatever in the translation, and not much in the original The first six lines are composed on the principle of contrast pointed out mp 99

CHORRIS

Joyful will it be and pleasant To the future times and present, The benignant happy day, Which will shine on us at last, Announcing with his genial ray, That Cleon is condemn'd and cast! -Notwithstanding we have heard From the seniors of the city.1 Jurymen revered and fear'd. An opinion deep and pithy, That the state for household use Wants a pestle and a mortar, That Cleon serves to pound and bruse, Or else our moome would run shorter -But I was told, the boys at school Observed it as a kind of rule, That he never could be made By any means to play the lyre, Till he was well and truly paid-I mean with lashes for his hire. At 'ength his master all at once Expell'd him as an utter dunce. As by nature ill inclined, And wanting gifts of every kind.

There was a portion of the lower class of citizens who con ceived that the state had an interest in supporting the tyrannical exactions of Cleon -See p 134.

Re-enter CLEON and the SAUSAGE-SELLER—CLEON with a large packet and the Sausage-seller staggering under a porter's load.

CLEON (to DEMUS)

Well, there 's a bundle, you see, I've brought of 'em; But that's not all; there's more of them to come— S S I grunt and sweat, you see, with the load of

'em;

But that's not all; there's more of 'em to come-DEM But what are these?—all?

CLEON. Oracles

What, all? DEM CLEON Ah, you're surprised it seems, at the quantity,

That's nothing, I've a trunk full of 'em at home -S S And I've a garret and out-house both brim-full. DEM Let's give 'em a look-Whose oracles are these?

CLEON Bakis's, mine are

DEM (to the SAUSAGE-SELLER.) Well, and whose are yours?

S S Mine are from Glanis, Bakis's elder brother.—

DEM And what are they all about?

About the Athenians. CLEON

About the island of Pylos -about myself,-About yourself,—about all kinds of things

DEM. And what are yours about?

SSAbout the Athenians,-

About pease-pudding and porridge,-about the Spartans.

About the war, -about the pilchard fishery, -

About the state of things in general,—

About short weights and measures in the market,-

About all things and persons whatsoever,-

About yourself and me -Bid him go whistle

Come, read them out then! that one in particular.

My favourite one of all, about the eagle:-

About my being an eagle in the clouds CLEON Listen then ! Give your attention to the oranle t

Son of Erechtheus, mark and ponder well, This holy warning from Apollo's cell. It bids thee cherish him the sacred whelp. Who for thy sake doth bite and bark and yelp Guard and protect him from the chattering lay, So shall thy juries all be kept m pay' DEM. That's quite above me! Erechthous and a whelp! What should Erechtheus do with a whelp or a jay? What does it mean? 1

CLEON The meaning of it is this I am presignified as a dog, who barks And watches for you Apollo therefore bids you Cherish the sacred whelp-meaning myself

SS I tell ye, the oracle means no such thing This whelp has gnaw'd the corner off, but here

I've a true perfect copy

DEM Read it out, then! Meanwhile I'll pick a stone up for the nonce, For fear the dog in the oracle should bute me

S S 'Son of Erechtheus, 'ware the gap tooth'd dog The crafty mongrel that purloins thy prog,

Fawning at meals, and filehing scraps away, The whilst you gape and stare another way, He prowls by night, and pilfers many a prize, Amidst the sculleries and the colonies'

DEM Well, Glanis has the best of it, I declare CLEON First listen my good friend, and then decide In sacred Athens shall a woman dwell Who shall bring forth a hon fierce and fell, This lion shall defeat the gnats and flies, Which are that noble nation's enemies.

Discussions on the genuine and corrupt copies of oracles were not unfrequent we find an instance in Thucvdides See also the scene of the Soothsaver in the Birds

Him you must guard and keep for public good, With iron bulwarks and a wall of wood.'

DEM (to the SAUSAGE-SELLER.)

D've understand it?

ŠS No, not I, by Jove!

CLEON. Apollo admonishes you to guard and keep me.

I am the lion here alluded to

DEM A hon! Why, just now you were a dog! S S Aye, but he stifles the true sense of it Designedly—That 'wooden and iron wall',

In which Apollo tells ye he should be kept

DEM What did the deity mean by it? What d'ye think?

S. S To have him kept in the pillory and the stocks DEM That prophecy seems likely to be verified. 'Heed not their strain; for crows and daws abound.

But love your faithful hawk, victorious found, Who brought the Spartan magpies tied and bound.'
SS 'The Paphlagonian impudent and rash

Risk'd that adventure in a drunken dash.

-O simple son of Cecrops ill advised!

I see desert in arms unfairly prized: Men only can secure and kill the game;

A woman's deed it is to cook the same.'

CLEON Do listen at least to the oracle about Pylos; 'Pylos there is behind, and eke before,1

The bloody Pylos'

Let me hear no more! DEM

Those Pylos's are my torment evermore S S But here's an oracle which you must attend to;

About the navy—a very particular one
DEM Yes, I'll attend—I wish it would tell me how
To pay my seamen their arrears of wages
S S 'O son of Aegeus, ponder and beware
Of the dog-fox, so crafty, lean and spare,

1 There were three places of this name, not very distant from each other

Subtle and swift.' Do ye understand it?

DEM. Yes!
Of course the dog fox 1 means Philostratus

S S That's not the meaning—but the Paphlagonian Is always urging you to send out ships,

Cruising about, exacting contributions, A thing that Apollo positively forbids

DEM. But why are the ships here call'd dog foxes?

S S

Why?

Because the ships are swift, and dogs are swift.

DEM. But what has a fox to do with it? Why dog foxes?

SS The fox is a type of a ship's crew, marauding And eating up the vineyards.

DEM Well, so be it!

But how are my foxes to get paid their wages?

S S I'll settle it all, and make provision for them,
Three days' provision, presently Only now,
This instant, let me remind you of an oracle
'Beware Cullene'

Desc. What's the meaning of it?
SS Cullene, in the sense I understand,
Implies a kind of a culling asking hand—
The coiled hand of an informing bully,

Culling a bribe from his affrighted cully,

A hand like his

CLEON No, no! you're quite mistaken, It alludes to Diopithes's lame hand.⁵
But here's a glorious prophecy which sings, 'How you shall rule on earth, and rank with kings, And soar aloft in air on eagle's wings'

The dog was (in a bad sense) the type of impudence—the fox of cunning—Philostratus, the compound of the two, gained his subsistence by a very infamous trade.

The Schollast tells us that the common informers at Athens, when accosting and threatening persons for the purpose of extortion, had an established token (the hand bellowed and slipt out hencath the cloak) indicating that they were willing to desist for a piece of money

As a soothsayer he ought to have been free from any bodily defect.

S. S. And some of mine foretell that you shall be 'Sovereign of all the world and the Red Sea;

And sit on juries in Echatana,

Munching sweet buns and biscuit all the day'

CLEON But me Minerva loves, and I can tell Of a portentous vision that befell-The goddess in my sleep appear'd to me, Holding a flagon, as it seem'd to be, From which she pour'd upon the old man's crown Wealth, health and peace, like ointment running down '

S S And I too dreamt a dream, and it was this:

-Minerva came from the Acropolis,

There came likewise her serpent and her owl, And in her hand she held a certain bowl, And pour'd ambrosia on the old man's head,

And salt-fish pickle upon yours instead.

Dem Well, Glanis is the cleverest after all. And therefore I'm resolved, from this time forth, To put myself into your charge and keeping, To be tended in my old age and taken care of.

No, do pray wait a little; and see how regularly

I'll furnish you with a daily dole of barley.

DEM Don't tell me of barley! I can't bear to hear of it!

I've been cajoled and choused more than enough,
By Thouphanes ' and yourself this long time past.
CLEON Then I'll provide you delicate wheaten flour.
S S And I'll provide you manchets and roast meat,

And messes piping hot that cry, 'Come eat me'
DEM Make haste then, both of ye Whatever you do---

And whichever of the two befriends me most, I'll give him up the management of the state CLEON Well, I'll be first then.

S.S No you shan't, 'tis I. [Both run off, but the Sausage-seller contrives to get the start

¹ An adherent of Cleon

CHORUS

Worthy Demus I your estate
Is a glorious thing, we own—
The haughtiest of the proud and great
Watch and tremble at your frown,
Like a sovereign or a chief,
But so easy of belief,
Every fawning rogue and thief
Finds you ready to his hand
Flatterers you cannot withstand.
To them your confidence is lent
With opinions always bent
To what your last advisers say,
Your noble mind is gone astray

DEMUS

Those brams of yours are weak and green,
My wits are sound whate'er ye say
'Tis nothing but my froward spleen
That affects this false decay
'Tis my fancy, 'tis my way,
To drawl and drivel through the day
But though you see me dote and dream,
Never think me what I seem!—
—For my confidential slave
I prefer a pilfering knave,
And when he's pamper'd and full blown,
I snatch him up and—dash him down!

CHORUS.

We approve of your intent, If you spoke it as you meant, If you keep them like the beasts, Fatten'd for your future feasts, Pamper'd in the public stall, Till the next occasion call, Then a little easy vote

Knocks them down, and cuts their throat; And you dish and serve them up, As you want to dine or sup.

DEMUS.

Mark me — when I seem to doze, When my wearied eyelids close; Then they think their tricks are hid: But beneath the drooping lid, Still I keep a corner left, Tracing every secret theft.

I shall match them by and by! All the rogues you think so sly, All the deep intriguing set, Are but dancing in a net,¹ Till I purge their stomachs clean With the hemlock and the bean.

The Sausage-seller and Cleon re-enter separately.

CLEON Get out there!

S S You get out yourself, you rascal! CLEON Oh Demus! here have I been waiting, ready

To attend upon ye, and serve ye, a long, long time. S S And I've been waiting a longer, longer time—Ever so long—a great long while ago

DEM And I've been waiting here cursing ye both,

A thousand times, a long, long time ago

S S. You know what you're to do?

DEM.

Yes, yes, I know;
But you may tell me, however, notwithstanding

¹ Persons subject to an effectual restraint, of which they were themselves unaware, were said to be dancing in a net. The Royalists, in Cromwell's time, found themselves baffled in all their attempts, without at all suspecting the system of secret information by which they were circumvented and restrained. When this came to be known afterwards, it was said that Cromwell had kept them dancing in a net, it is joyous and alert, conspiring and corresponding in imaginary security, wholly unconscious of the restraint in which they had been held.

S S Make it a race, and let us start to serve you, And win your favour without loss of time

DEM So be it —Start now—one! two! three! CLEON Heigh day!

DEM Why don't you start?

CLEON He's cheated and got before me

DEM Well, truly, indeed, I shall be feasted rarely, My courtiers and admirers will quite spoil me
CLEON There, I'm the first, you see, to bring ye

a chair

S S But a table—Here, I've brought it, first and foremost.

CLEON See here, this little half meal cake from Pylos.

Made from the flour of victory and success

S S But here's a cake! See here! which the heavenly goddess

Patted and flatted herself, with her ivory hand,

For your own eating

Dem. Wonderful mighty goddess!
What an awfully large hand she must have had!
CLEON See this pease pudding, which the warlike

Achieved at Pylos, and bestows upon you.

S S The goddess upholds your whole establish ment.

And holds this mess of porridge over your head.

Dem I say the establishment could not subsist
For a single hour, unless the goddess upheld
The porridge of our affairs most manifestly 1

¹ This refers to a notion very prevalent among the Athenians, and which is alluded to elsewhere.

Rash and ever in the wrong, a providence protects us ever, Gulding all your empty plans, assisting every wild endeavour Clouds, 1 586

It was founded on an anecdote, dating as far back as the time of the contest between Neptune and Minorva. Neptune, in his chagrin, imprecated upon the territory, of which he was dispossessed, the curse of being always governed by 'bad

CLEON. She, the dread virgin who delights in battle, And storm and battery, sends this batter-pudding

S S This savoury stew, with comely sippets deck'd, Is sent you by the Gorgon-bearing goddess,

Who bids you gorge and gormandize thereon CLEON The daughter of Jove array'd in panoply

Presents you a pancake to create a panic

Amongst your enemies

And by me she sends SS For your behoof this dainty dish of fritters,
Well fried, to strike your foemen with affright;
—And here's a cup of wine—taste it and try.
DEM It's capital, faith!

SS. And it ought to be; for Pallas

Mix'd it herself expressly for your palate CLEON. This slice of rich sweet-cake, take it from

S S This whole great rich sweet-cake, take it from me

CLEON (to the SAUSAGE-SELLER) Ah, but hare-pie—where will you get hare-pie?

S S (aside) Hare-pie! What shall I do!—Come, now's the time.

Now for a nimble, knowing, dashing trick

CLEON (to the Sausage-seller, showing the dish which he is going to present)

Look there, you poor rabscallion.

Pshaw! no matter. I've people of my own there, in attendance. They're coming here—I see them

CLEON Who? What are they?

S S. Envoys with bags of money
[CLEON sets down his hare-pie, and runs off the stage to intercept the supposed envoys Where? Where are they?

CLEON

Where? Where? S S What's that to you? Can't ye be civil?

councils' This Minerva could not cancel, but she subjoined that these bad councils, bad as they might be, should be successful

Why don't you let the foreigners alone?-There's a hare pie, my dear own little Demus, A nice hare pie, I've brought ye !- See, look there ! CLEON (returning) By Jove, he's stolen it, and served it up

S S Just as you did the prisoners at Pylos DEMUS Where did ye get it? How did ye steal it?

Tell me

S S The scheme and the suggestion were divine, The theft and the execution simply mine.

CLEON I took the trouble.

SS But I served it up DEMUS Well, he that brings the thing must get the thanks

CLEON (aside.) Alas, I'm oircumvented and undone, Out-faced and over impudentified.

S S Come, Demus, had not you best decide at once.

Which is your truest friend, and best disposed To the interest of the state, to your belly and you.

DEMUS But how can I decide it cleverly?

Which would the audience think is the cleverest way ?

S S I'll tell ye, take my chest and search it fairly, Then search the Paphlagonian's and determine

DEMUS Let's look, what's here?

It's empty, don't you see? My dear old man, I've given you everything DEMUS Well, here's a chest indeed, in strict accordance

With the judgement of the public perfectly empty / 8.8 Come, now let's rummage out the Paphla gonian's.

See there !

DEMUS. Oh, bless me, what a hoard of dainties! And what a lump of cake the fellow has kept, Compared with the little tiny slice he gave me S 8 That was his common practice, to pretend

To make you presents, giving up a trifle, To keep the biggest portion for himself

O villain, how you've wronged and DEMUS. cheated me.

Me that have honour'd ye, and have made ye presents CLEON I stole on principle for the public service DEMUS Pull off your garland—give it back to me,

For him to wear !

Come, sırrah, give it back! CLEON Not so -There still remains an oracle, Which marks the fatal sole antagonist,

Predestined for my final overthrow

S S. Yes! And it points to me by name and person 1

CLEON Yet would I fam inquire and question you; How far the signs and tokens of the prophecy Combine in your behalf—Answer me truly! What was your early school? Where did you learn The rudiments of letters and of music?

S S Where hogs are singed and scalded in the shambles,

There was I pummell'd to a proper tune CLEON Hah, sayst thou so? this prophecy begins To bite me to the soul with deep forebodings.

—Yet tell me again—What was your course of practice

In feats of strength and skill at the Palaestra? S S Stealing and staring, perjuring and swearing— CLEON. O mighty Apollo, your decree condemns me!

Say, what was your employment afterwards? S S I practised as a Sausage-seller chiefly,

Occasionally as pimp and errand-boy.

CLEON. Oh misery! lost and gone! totally lost!

(after a pause.)

One single hope remains, a feeble thread, I grasp it to the last —Yet answer me —What was your place of sale for sausages? Was it the market or the city gate?

S S The city gate! Where salted fish are sold! CLEON. Out! Out, alas! my destiny is fulfill'd: Hurry me hence within with quick conveyance,

The wreck and ruin of my former self. Farewell my name and honours! Thou my garland, Farewell! my successor must wear you now, To shine in new pre eminence a rogue, Perhaps less perfect, but more prosperous!

S. S. O Jove! Patron of Greece! the praise be Demosthenes (in a very civil, submissive tone.) I wish you joy most heartily, and I hope, Now you're promoted, you'll remember me, For helping you to advancement. All I ask Is Phanus's place, to be under sorivener to you.

You tell me what's your name?

S S

So call'd from the Agora, where I got my living

DEM. With you then, Agoracritus, in your hands
I place myself, and furthermore consign

This Paphlagonian here to your disposal

S S Then you shall find me a most affectionate And faithful guardian, the best minister That ever served the sovoreign of the cockneys [Execut omnes

The actors being withdrawn, the Chorus remain again in possession of the theatre. Their first song is a parody from Pindar, which is converted into a lampoon upon Lysistratus, who, having reduced himself to poverty, had procured (by the assistance of his friends) a lucrative appointment at Delphi. He is mentioned in the Acharmans, see the song, p. 51.

To record to future years
The lordly wealthy characters,
Steeds, and cars, and crowns victorious,
These are worthy themes and glorious.
Let the Muse refrain from malice,
Nor molest with idle sallies
Him the poor Lysistratus,
Taunted for his empty purse,

Every penny gone and spent, Lately with Thaumantis sent On a Delphic embassy, With a tear in either eye, Clinging to the deity To bemoan his misery.

EPIRRHEMA.

An attempt is here made to express what the Scholiast points out, namely, that the contrast between the two brothers is a piece of dry irony. In other respects the original is hardly capable of translation

To revile the vile, has ever been accounted just and right,

The business of the comic bard, his proper office, his delight.

On the villainous and base the lashes of invective fall; While the virtuous and the good are never touch'd or harm'd at all.

Thus without offence, to mark a profligate and wicked brother.

For the sake of explanation, I proceed to name another: One is wicked and obscure, the brother unimpeach'd and glorious,

Eminent for taste and art, a person famous and notorious

Arignotus—when I name him, you discern at once, with ease,

The viler and obscurer name, the person meant-

Ariphrades

If he were a rascal only we should let the wretch alone, He's a rascal, and he knows it, and desires it to be known.

Still we should not have consented to lampoon him into vogue,

As an ordinary rascal, or a villain, or a rogue;

But the wretch is grown inventive, eager to descend and try

Undiscover'd, unattempted depths of filth and infamy;

With his nastiness and lowdness, going on from bad to worse,

With his verses and his music, and his friend Olonychus

Jolly friends and mates of mine, when with me you quench your thirst.

Splt before you taste the wine—spit upon the fellow first.

Meditating on my bed, Strange perplexities are bred In my weary, restless head. I contemplate and discuss The nature of Cleonymus, All the modes of his existence. His provision and subsistence, His necessities and wants, And the houses that he haunts. Till the master of the table Accosts him like the gods in fable, Manufested and adored, At Baucis' and Philemon's board-'Mighty sovereign! Mighty lord! Leave us in mercy and grace -Forbear! Our frugal insufficient fare, Pardon it! and in mercy spare!'

ANTEPIRRHEMA.

Our Truemes, I was told, held a conference of late One, a bulky dame and old, spoke the first in the debate.

'Ladies, have you heard the news? In the town it pass'd for truth, That a certain low-bred upstart, one Hyperbolus for

Asks a hundred of our number, with a further proposi tion

That we should sail with him to Carthage 1 on a secret expedition.'

They all were scandalized and shock'd to hear so wild

a project plann'd,

A virgin vessel newly dock'd, but which never had been mann'd,

Answer'd instantly with anger, 'If the fates will not afford me

Some more suitable proposal, than that wretch to come aboard me,

I would rather rot and perish, and remain from year to year,

Till the worms have eat my bottom, lingering in the harbour here

No, thank Heaven, for such a master Nauson's daughter is too good;

And if my name were not Nauphantis, I am made of nails and wood.

I propose then to retire, in sanctuary to remain

Near the temple of the Furies or to Theseus and his fane

Still the project may proceed; Hyperbolus can never fail,

He may launch the trays of wood, in which his lamps were set to sale'

AGOBACRITUS (the Sausage-seller.)

Peace be amongst you! Silence! Peace! Close the courts; let pleadings cease! All your customary joys, Juries, accusers, strife, and noise!

Be merry, I say! Let the theatre ring

With a shout of applause for the news that I bring. Chor. O, thou the protector and hope of the state, CHOR. O, thou the protector and hope of the Of the isles and allies of the city, relate What happy event do you call us to greet, With bonfire and sacrifice filling the street?

¹ Carthage in this instance may admit of a doubt See note to p 90, but it was by no means beyond the speculations of Athenian ambition at that time throughout this scene, is marked with the characteristics of youth, warmth, eagerness, and occasional bashfulness and embarrassment.

DEM My dearest Agoracritus, come here-

I'm so obliged to you for your cookery!
I feel an alter'd man, you've quite transform'd me Ag. What! I? That's nothing; if you did but know

The state you were in before, you'd worship me

DEM. What was I doing? How did I behave?

Do tell me—inform against me—let me know.

AG Why, first, then if an orator in the assembly Began with saying, Demus, I'm your friend, Your faithful, zealous friend, your only friend, You used to chuckle, and smirk, and hold your head

DEM. No, sure!

So he gain'd his end, and bilk'd and choused ye

DEM But did not I perceive it? Was not I told? Ag. By Jove, and you wore those ears of yours continually

Wide open or close shut, like an umbrella DEM. Is it possible? Was I indeed so mere a driveller

In my old age, so superannuated?

Ac. Moreover, if a couple of orators
Were pleading in your presence, one proposing
To equip a fleet, his rival arguing
To get the same supplies distributed

To the jurymen, the patron of the juries Carried the day—But why do you hang your head 80 ?

What makes you shuffle about? Can't ye stand still?

DEM I feel ashamed of myself and all my follies.'

Ag ' 'Twas not your fault—don't think of it Your advisers

Were most to blame But for the future—tell me,

¹ The tone of the Sausage-seller is that of a considerate indulgent preceptor to a young man who has been misbehaving.

If any rascally villamous orator Should address a jury with such words as these Remember, if you acquit the prisoner Your daily food and maintenance are at stake', How would you treat such a pleader?—Answer me DEM I should toss him headlong into the public pit, With a halter round his gullet, and Hyperbolus Tred fast to the end of it.

Αg That's a noble answer! Wise and judicious, just and glorious! Now tell me, in other respects, how do you mean

To manage your affairs?

DEM Why, first of all, I'll have the arrears of seamen's wages paid To a penny, the instant they return to port. There's many a worn out rump will bless ye and thank ye

DEM Moreover, no man that has been enroll'd Upon the list for military service, Shall have his name erased for fear or favour Ac That gives a bang to Cleonymus's buckler

DEM. Ill not permit those fellows without beards To harangue in our assembly, boys or men.

Then what's to become of Cleisthenes and Strato ? 1

Where must they speak?

I mean those kind of youths. Dem. The little puny would be politicians. Sitting conversing in perfumers' shops. Lisping and prating in this kind of way ' Phaeax is sharp-he made a good come off And saved his life in a famous knowing style. I reckon him a first-rate, quite capital For energy and compression, so collected, And such a choice of language! Then to see him Battling against a mob-it's quite delightful! He's never cou d! He bothers 'em completely!'

Ao It's your own fault, in part you ve help'd to spoil 'em,

¹ See Ach , p 12, where both are mentioned

But what do you mean to do with 'em for the future? DEM. I shall send them into the country, all the pack of 'em,

To learn to hunt, and leave off making laws—
Ag. Then I present you here with a folding chair,
And a stout lad to carry it after you.

DEM Ah, that reminds one of the good old times.
Ag But what will you say, if I give you a glorious

A lusty strapping truce of thirty years?

Come forward here, my lass, and show yourself.

Dem. By Jove, what a face and figure! I should like

To ratify and conclude incontinently.

Where did you find her?

Ac Oh, the Paphlagonian, Of course, had huddled her out of sight, within there. But now you've got her, take her back with you Into the country

DEM Eut the Paphlagonian,
What shall we do to punish him? What d'ye think?
Ag. Oh, no great matter He shall have my trade, With an exclusive sausage-selling patent, To traffic openly at the city gates, And garble his wares with dogs' and asses' flesh; With a privilege moreover to get drunk, And bully among the strumpets of the suburbs, And the ragamuffin waiters at the baths

DEM. That's well imagined; it precisely suits him; His natural bent, it seems, his proper element To squabble with poor trulls and low rabscallions. As for myself, I give you an invitation To dine with me in the hall You'll fill the seat Which that unhappy villain held before Take this new robe! Wear it and follow me!

And you, the rest of you, conduct that fellow To his future home and place of occupation, The gate of the city, where the allies and foreigners, That he maltreated, may be sure to find him [Exeunt.

THE BIRDS

INTENDED TO CONVEY SOME NOTION OF ITS EFFECT AS

AN ACTED PLAY, AND TO ILLUSTRATE CERTAIN

POINTS OF DRAMATIC HUMOUR AND

CHARACTER DISCOVERABLE

IN THE ORIGINAL.

'Terentius Menandrum, Plautus et Caecilius, veteres Comicos interpretati sunt, numquid haerent in verbis, ao non decorem potius et elegantiam in translatione conservant?'—HIERON Epis de optimo genere interpretandi.

Si Graios patrio carmine adire sales Possumus, optatis plus jam procedimus ipsis. Hoc satis est.

VIRGIL.

THE BIRDS

Peisthetairus, an Athenian eitizen, hut disgusted with his own country, starts on his travels proposing to seek his fortune in the kingdom of the Birds. He is represented as the essential man of business and ability, the true political adventurer, the man who directs every thing and everyhody, who is never in the wrong, never at a loss, never satisfied with what has been done by others, uniformly successful in his operations. He maintains a constant ascendancy, or if he loses it for a moment, recovers it immediately

Euclpides, a simple easy-minded droll companion, his natural follower and adherent, as the Merry Andrew is of the Mountehank. It will be seen that, like the Morry Andrew, he interposes his buffoonish comments on the grand oration delivered by his master

Epops, King of the Birds, formerly Tereus, King of Thrace, but long ago, according to the records of mythology, transformed into a Hoopee. He appears as the courteous dignified sovereign of a primitive uncivilized race, whom he is desirous to improve he gives a gracious reception to strangers arriving from a country more advanced in civilization; and adopts the projects of aggrandizement suggested to him hy Peisthetairus.

The Chorus of Birds, his subjects, retain, on the contrary, their hereditary hatred and suspicion of the human race, they are ready to break out into open mntiny against their king, and to massacro his foreign (human) advisers upon the spot—It is with the greatest difficulty that they can be provailed upon to hear reason, and attend to the luminous exposition of Peisthetairus. His harangue has the effect of conciliating and convincing them; his projects are adopted without a dissentient voice. War is not immediately declared against the gods, but a sort of Mexican blockade is established by proclamation.

Prometheus, a malcontent deity, the ancient patron of the human race, still retaining a concealed attachment to the deposed dynasty of Saturn He comes over secretly with intelligence, which Peisthetairus avails himself of, and which proves ultimately decisive of the subjugation of the gods

Neptune,
Hercules,
Commissioned to treat with PeistheTriballus, or the tairus Neptune is represented as Triballian,
a formal dignified personage of the old school Hercules as a passionate, wrong-headed, greedy blockhead he is cajoled and gained over by Peisthetairus, and in his turn intimidates the Triballian, an ignorant barbarian deity, who is hardly able to speak intelligibly They join together, Neptune is out-voted, and Peisthetairus concludes a treaty by which his highest pretensions are realized.

The characters above-mentioned are the only ones who contribute in any way to the progress of the drama, the remainder, a very amusing set of persons, are introduced in detached scenes, exemplifying the various interruptions and annoyances incident to the man of business, distracting his attention and embarrassing him in the exercise of his authoritative functions. There are, however, exceptions

Iris, who is brought in, having been captured and detained for an infringement of the blockade

A Priest who comes to sacrifice at the inauguration of the new city

Two Messengers arriving from different quarters, with very interesting and satisfactory intelligence

The rest are a mere series of intruders on the time and attention of the great man

Poet, a ragged vagabond, who comes begging with an inaugural ode on the foundation of the new city.

A Soothsayer, arriving with oracles relative to the same important event, and a demand of perquisites due to himself by divine authority

Meton, the Astronomer, proposes to make a plan and survey of the new city

A Commissioner from Athens, a very authoritative personage

A Vendor of copies of decrees he enters, reading them aloud, like a hawker to attract purchasers.

Parricide, a young man who has beaten his father, and proposes to strangle him, offers himself as a desirable acquisition to the new colony

Kinesias, the dithyrambio poet, applies for a pair of wings

Informer, a young man whose hereditary trade is that of an informer, and whose practice extends to the Islands, comes with the same application

THE BIRDS

SCENE.

A wild desolate country with a bare open prospect on one side, and some upright rocks covered with shrubs and brushwood in the centre of the stage. PEISTHETAIRUS and EUELPIDES appear as a couple of worn-out pedes trian travellers, the one with a Raven and the other with a Jackdaw on his hand -they appear to be seeking for a direction from the motions and signals made to them by the Birds

EVELPIDES (speaking to his Jackdaw)

Right on, do ye say? to the tree there in the dis tance?

PEISTHETAIRUS (speaking first to his Raven, and then to his companion)

Plague take ye! Why, this creature calls us back! What use can it answer tramping up and down?

We're lost, I tell ye our journey's come to nothing PEIS To think of me travelling a thousand stadia

With a Raven for my adviser! Think of me too.

Going at the instigation of a Jackdaw. To wear my toes and my tocnails to pieces!
Pris. I don't know even the country, where we've got to And yet you expect to find a country here. A country for yourself !

Truly, not I. Pers

Not even Execestides 1 could do 1t, That finds himself a native everywhere

Ev Oh dear! We're come to ruin, utter ruin! PEIS. Then go that way, can't ye?—' the Road to Ruin!'

Ev. He has brought us to a fine pass, that crazy fellow.

Philocrates the poulterer; he pretended To enable us to find where Tereus lives: The King that was, the Hoopoe that is now; Persuading us to buy these creatures of him, That Raven there for three-pence, and this other, This little Tharrelides 2 of a Jackdaw,— He charged a penny for: but neither of 'em Are fit for anything but to bite and scratch.

(Speaking to his Jackdaw)

Well, what are ye after now? gaping and poking! You've brought us straight to the rock Where would you take us?

There's no road here!

PEIS No, none, not even a path Ev Nor don't your Raven tell us anything? PEIS She 's alter'd somehow—she croaks differently.

Ev. But which way does she point? What does she say?

PEIS Say? Why, she says, she'll bite my fingers off

Eu. Well, truly it's hard upon us, hard indeed, To go with our own carcasses to the crows, And not be able to find 'em after all. (Turning to the audience.) 3

1 He is attacked again in this play, as a foreign barbarian arrogating to himself the privileges of a true-born Athenian

Tharrelides was nicknamed Jackdaw, and Euclpides in contempt of his Jackdaw calls it a Tharrelides! The Raven and the Jackdaw are characteristic Peisthetairus is the bearer of the sagacious bird, his companion is equipped with a Jackdaw

³ Peisthetairus, it will be seen, allows his companion to put himself forward, with the newly discovered natives, remaining himself in the background as the person of authority, making use of the other as his harbinger, he allows him also to address For our design, most excellent spectators, (Our passion, our disease, or what you will), Is the reverse of that which Sacas ¹ feels, For he, though not a native, strives perforce To make himself a citizen whilst we, Known and acknowledged as Athenians born, (Not hustled off, nor otherwise compell'd), Have deem'd it fitting to betake ourselves To these our legs, and make our person scarce ²

Not through disgust or hatred or disdain Of our illustrious birthplace, which we deem Glorious and free, with equal laws ordain'd For fine and forfeiture and confiscation,

With taxes universally diffused,

And suits and pleas abounding in the Courts.

For grasshoppers sit only for a month Chirping upon the twigs, but our Athenians Sit chirping and discussing all the year, Perch'd upon points of evidence and law

Therefore we trudge upon our present travels, With these our sacrificial implements, To seek some easier unlitigious place, Meaning to settle there and colonize Our present errand is in search of Tereus, (The Hoopee that is now) to learn from him If in his expeditions, flights, and journeys, He ever chanced to light on such a spot.

PEIS Holloh!

Eu What's that?

Pers My raven here points upwards

-Decidedly!

the audience, not choosing to compromise himself by unnecessary communications

The full and complete account of their motives and design is moreover much better suited to the careless gossiping character of Euclyldes.

1 Acestor, a tragic poet, not being a genuine Athenian, was called Sacas from the name of a Thracian tribe

2 We may suppose that Persthetairus must have accompanied this speech with a grave authoritative gesture, indicative of assent and approbation

Aye, and here's my Jackdaw, too, Ev. Gaping as if she saw something above.— Yes,—I'll be bound for it, this must be the place: We'll make a noise, and know the truth of it. PEIS Then 'kick against the rock' 1. Against the rock '—and make it a double knock ' Then fling a stone at it! Eυ With all my heart, Holloh, there ! What do you mean with your Holloh? You should cry Hoop for a Hoopoe Well, then, Hoop! Hoop and holloh, there '-Hoopoe, Hoopoe, I say ' TROCHILUS What's here? Who's bawling there? Who wants my master? [The door is opened, and both parties start at seeing each other Eu Oh mercy, mighty Apollo! what a beak! Tr. Ev Out! out upon it! a brace of bird-catchers! No, no; don't be disturb'd, think better of us TR You'll both be put to death Eσ But we're not men. $T_{\mathbf{R}}$ Not men! what are ye? what do ye call yourselves? The fright has turn'd me into a Yellow-Hammer. $\mathbf{E}\mathbf{u}$ Tr. Poh! Stuff and nonsense! $\mathbf{E}\mathbf{n}$ I can prove it to ye. Search 1 But your comrade here, what bird is he? $\mathbf{T}\mathbf{R}$ I'm changed to a Golden Pheasant just at present are ye?

Eu Now tell me, in heaven's name, what creature

TR I'm a Slave Bird.

Eu. A slave! how did it happen;

Were you made prisoner by a fighting cock?
Tr. No When my master made himself a Hoopoe,

He begg'd me to turn bird to attend upon him.

¹ To 'kick against the rock' was proverbial.

Ev Do birds, then, want attendance? Yes, of course, Tr. In his case, having been a man before, He longs occasionally for human dict,

His old Athenian fare pilchards for instance.-Then I must fetch the pilchards, sometimes porridge,

He calls for porridge, and I mix it for him

Eu 1 Well, you're a dapper waiter, a didapper, But didapper, I say, do step within there,

And call your master out.

But just at present TR. He's taking a little rest after his luncheon, Some myrtle berries and a dish of worms

Ev No matter, call him here, we wish to speak to him TR.2 He'll not be pleased, I'm sure, but notwithstanding.

Since you desire it, I'll make bold to call him. [Exit Pers (looking after him) Confound ye, I say, you've frighten'd me to death.

Eu He has scared away my Jackdaw, it's flown away Pris You let it go yourself, you coward.

Tell me.

Have you not let your Raven go? Not I. Pers

Eu Where is it then?

Flown off of its own accord. Pers EU You did not let it go! you're a brave fellow!
The Hoode (from within.) Open the door, I say let me go forth THE ROYAL HOOPOE appears with a tremendous heak and crest. Eu O Hercules, what a creature! What a plumage!

And a triple tier of crests, what can it bold 1 The Trochilus has been unnecessarily communicative, and shown himself a very simple sort of serving man, Euclpides has tact enough to discover this, and assumes the ascendancy accordingly In the tone of Simple, Master Slender's serving man Hoo. Who call'd? who wanted me?

Eu. May the heavenly powers !-

-Confound ye! I say (aside.)

Hoo You mock at me, perhaps, Seeing these plumes—But, stranger, you must know That once I was a man.

Eu We did not laugh

At you, Sir.

Hoo What, then, were you laughing at? Ev. Only that beak of yours seem'd rather odd.

Hoo It was your poet Sophocles 1 that reduced me

To this condition with his tragedies

Eu What are you, Tereus? Are you a bird, or what?

Hoo. A Bird.

Eu. Then where are all your feathers?

Hoo Gond

Eu In consequence of an illness?

Hoo No; the Birds At this time of the year leave off their feathers

But you! what are ye? Tell me.

Eu Mortal men

Hoo What countrymen?

Eu Of the country of the Triremes.²

Hoo. Jurymen, I suppose?

Ev Quite the reverse,

We're anti-jurymen

Hoo Does that breed still

Continue amongst you?

Eu Some few specimens s You'll meet with here and there in country places.

Hoo And what has brought you here? What was your object?

¹ In his tragedy of Tereus, Sophocles had represented him as transformed (probably only in the last scenes) with the head and beak of a bird

² Galleys with three banks of oars The Athenians were at that time undisputed masters of the sea

³ The love of litigation and the passion for sitting on juries, with the exception of a few who retained their old agricultural habits, had infected the whole Athenian community

Ev We wish'd to advise with you.

Hoo With me! For what?
Eu Because you were a man the same as us,
and found yourself in debt, the same as us.

And found yourself in debt the same as us, And did not like to pay the same as us, And after that, you changed into a bird, And ever since have flown and wander'd far Over the lands and seas, and have acquired All knowledge that a bird or man can learn.

Therefore we come, as suppliants, to be seech Your favour and advice to point us out Some comfortable country, close and snug, A country like a blanket or a rug,

Where we might fairly fold ourselves to rest.

Yhere we might fairly fold ourselves to rest.

Hoo Do you wish then for a greater state than Athens?

Eu Not greater, but more suitable for us.

Hoo It's clear you're fond of aristocracy
Ev What, him, the son of Scellas! Aristocrates?

I abhor him

Hoo Well, what kind of a town would suit ye? Ev Why, such a kind of town as this, for instance,

A town where the importunities and troubles Are of this sort. Suppose a neighbour calls Betimes in the morning with a sudden summons 'Now, don't forget,' says he, 'for heaven's sake, To come to me to morrow, bring your friends, Children, and all, we've wedding cheer at home Come early, mind ye, and if you fail me now, Don't let me see your face when I'm in trouble'

Hoo So you're resolved to encounter all these hardships!

(To Peisthetaibus) And what say you?
Peis My fancy's much the

My fancy s much the same

Hoo How so?

Pris To find a place of the same sort, A kind of place where a good, jolly father

¹ Little or nothing is known of Aristocrates. He lived to the end of the war, and acted in concert with Thrasybulus against Critias Dem. in Theoremem Meets and attacks me thus-'What's come to ye With my young people? You don't take to 'em What! they're not reckon'd ugly! You might treat 'em, As an old friend, with a little attention, surely, And take a trifling civil freedom with 'em'

Hoo Aye! You're in love, I see, with difficulties And miseries Well, there's a city, in fact, Much of this sort, one that I think might suit ye,

Near the Red Sea

No, no! not near the sea; 1 Lest I should have the Salaminian galley 2 Arriving some fine morning with a summons Sent after me, and a pursuivant to arrest me
But could not you tell us of some Grecian city?
Hoo Why, there's in Elis there, the town of

Lepreum

Eu. No, no! No Lepreums; nor no lepers neither. No leprosies for me Melanthius 3

Has given me a disgust for leprosies

Hoo Then there's Opuntius in the land of Locris

Eu. Opuntius? Me to be like Opuntius!

With his one eye! Not for a thousand drachmas

But tell me, among the birds here, how do ye find it?

What kind of an existence?

Hoo. Pretty fair;

Not much amiss Time passes smoothly enough; And money is out of the question. We don't use it Eu You've freed yourselves from a great load of dross

Hoo We've our field sports. We spend our idle mornings

¹ A humorous blunder The Red Sea was, in fact, as inaccessible to ancient European navigation as the Caspian

² The Salaminian galley had been sent to arrest Alcibiades, then one of the joint commanders in Sicily This was one of the most fatal acts of that popular insanity which it was the poet's object to mitigate and counteract

A tragic poet, said to have been leprous, ridiculed elsewhere by the author, and by other comic poets, as Plato and Callias

A Nothing is recorded of Opuntius, except that he was reckoned a poltroon, and was blind of one eye

With banqueting and collations in the gardens, With poppy-seeds and myrtle. Εσ

So your time

Is pass'd like a perpetual wedding day

[Peisthetairus, who has hitherto felt his way by putting Evelpides forward, and allowing him to take the lead, and who has paid no attention to this trifling, inconclusive conversation, breaks out as from a profound reflective reverse.

Hah! What a power is here, what opportunities!

If I could only advise you I see it all!

The means for an infinite empire and command!

Hoo And what would you have us do? What's your advice?

PERS Do! what would I have ye do? Why, first of all

Don't flutter and hurry about all open mouth'd In that undignified way With us for instance, At home, we should cry out, 'What'creature's that?' And Teleas would be the first to answer

'A mere poor creature, a weak restless animal, A silly bird, that's neither here nor there.' 1

Hoo Yes. Teleas might say so It would be like

But tell me, what would you have us do? Peis (emphatically)

Concentrate, Bring all your birds together Build a city
Hoo The Birds! How could we build a city?

Where?

Nonsense. You can't be serious. What a PEIS question!

Look down.

I do H_{00}

PETS Look up now

Hoo So I do

¹ The lines between inverted commas may be understood either as the words of Teleas, or as a description of him, the ambiguity exists in the original, and is evidently intentional. It is continued in the next line of the Hoopoe's answer

PEIS. Now turn your neck round. 1

Hoo. I should sprain it though.

PEIS. Come, what d'ye see?

Hoo. The clouds and sky;—that 's all.

PEIS Well, that we call the pole and the atmosphere;

And would it not serve you birds for a metropole?

Hoo. Pole? Is it call'd a pole?

PEIS. Yes, that 's the name

Philosophers of late call it the pole;
Because it wheels and rolls itself about,
As it were, in a kind of roly-poly way.²
Well, there then, you may build and fortify,
And call it your Metropolis,—your Acropolis.
From that position you'll command mankind,
And keep them in utter thorough subjugation:
Just as you do the grasshoppers and locusts

And if the gods offend you, you'll blockade 'em,
And starve 'em to a surrender.
Hoo In what way?

Pers. Why thus. Your atmosphere is placed, you

In a middle point, just betwixt earth and heaven

A case of the same kind occurs with us
Our people in Athens, if they send to Delphi
With deputations, offerings, or what not,
Are forced to obtain a pass from the Boeotians:
Thus when mankind on earth are sacrificing,
If you should find the gods grown mutinous
And insubordinate, you could intercept
All their supplies of sacrificial smoke

Hoo By the earth and all its springs! springes and nooses!

¹ See in the Knights (p 90) a similar instance of ridiculous stage effect, where the Sausage-seller is mounted on his stool to survey the Athenian empire

² The comic poets ridiculed the new prevailing passion for astronomical and physical science. See further on the Parabasis and the scene where Meton the astronomer is introduced

The Hoopoe's exclamation and oath are in the original, as they are here represented, exactly in the style of Bob Acres!

To luckless Itys that befell. Thence the strain Shall rise again, And soar amain. Up to the lofty palace gate, Where mighty Apollo sits in state In Jove's abode, with his ivory lyre, Hymning aloud to the heavenly choir. While all the gods shall join with thee In a celestial symphony

[A solo on the flute supposed to be the Nightingale's call.

PEIS Oh, Jupiter! the dear delicious bird! With what a lovely tone she swells and falls, Sweetening the wilderness with delicate air.

 $\mathbf{E}\mathbf{\pi}$ Hist!

What? PEIS

 $\mathbf{E}\mathbf{v}$ Be quiet, can't ye?

Pers What's the matter?

 $\mathbf{E}\mathbf{v}$ The Hoopoe is just preparing for a song

Hoo. Hoop! hoop!

Come in a troop, Come at a call. One and all,

Birds of a feather,

All together

Birds of an humble gentle bill Smooth and shrill.

Dieted on seeds and grain, Rioting on the furrow'd plain,

Pecking, hopping, Picking, popping,

Among the barley newly sown. Birds of bolder louder tone. Lodging in the shrubs and bushes.

Mavises and Thrushes

On the summer berries browsing, On the garden fruits carousing,

All the grubs and vermin smouzing.

You that in an humbler station, With an active occupation, Haunt the lowly watery mead, Warring against the native breed, The gnats and flies, your enemies,

In the level marshy plain Of Marathon pursued and slain.

You that in a squadron driving
From the seas are seen arriving,
With the Cormorants and Mews
Haste to land and hear the news!
All the feather'd airy nation,
Birds of every size and station,
Are convened in convocation.
For an envoy queer and shrewd
Means to address the multitude,
And submit to their decision
A surprising proposition,
For the welfare of the state

Come in a flurry,
With a hurry-scurry,
Hurry to the meeting and attend to the debate.

The first appearance of the Chorus must have been a ornical point for the success of a play The audience had been hrought into good humour by their favourite musical performer, hy whom all the preceding songs were probably executed, for the dialogue on the stage passes solely between Peisthetairus and Euelpides, and the Hoopee, who is supposed to sing, does not appear The Chorus now appears, and in the original, forty lines follow, in which Peisthetairus and Euelpides act as showmen to the exhibition of twenty-four figures, dre-sed in imitation of the plumage of as many different kinds of hirds, which are passed in review with suitable romarks as they successively take their places in the orchestra. This passage is here omitted Whoever wishes to see how well it can be executed, may he referred to Mr Cary's translation.

 $^{^{1}}$ See what is said in p 181 of the profuse expense bestowed on the exhibition of this play

While the Birds are bustling about in their new coop of the orchestra, Euclpides contemplates them with surprise, which soon changes to alarm

The language of the Birds consists almost wholly of short syllables, the effect of which it is impossible to imitate in English. Some accents, which are added, may serve to mark the attempt they are added also to two spondaic lines, of which the imitation is more practicable.

Ev How they thicken, how they muster, How they clutter, how they cluster! Now they ramble here and thither,

Now they scramble altogether

What a fidgetting and clattering!

What a twittering and chattering!

Don't they mean to threaten us? What think ye? Pris Yes, methinks they do.

Eu They're gaping with an angry look against us both.

DOM.

PEIS It's very true.

CHOR. Where is He, the Magistrate that assembled us to deliberate?

Hoo Friends and comrades, here am I, your old associate and ally

Chor What have ye to communicate for the benefit of the state?

Hoo A proposal safe and useful, practicable, profitable,

Two projectors are arrived here, politicians shrewd and able

CHOR. Whee! whaw! where! where!

What? what? what? what? what?

Hoo I repeat it—human envoys are arrived, a steady pair,

To disclose without reserve a most stupendous huge affair

Chor. Chief, of all that ever were, the worst, the most unhappy one!

Speak, explain i

Hoo Don't be alarm'd!

CHOR Alas, alas! what have you done?

Hoo I've received a pair of strangers, who desired to settle here.

CHOR. Have you risk'd so rash an act?

I've done it, and I persevere. Hoo CHOR. But where are they?

Near beside you, near as I am, very near. Hoo Oùt, alàs i oùt, alàs i CHOR.

We are betràv'd, cruelly betrav'd To a calamitous end.

Our comrade and our friend.

Our companion in the fields and in the pastures Is the author of all our miseries and disasters. Our ancient sarced laws and solemn oath !

Transgrèssing bòth!

Trèasonably delivering us as a prize To our horrible immemorial enemies.

To a detestable race Exècrably base!

For the Bird our Chief, hereafter he must answer to the state.

With respect to these intruders, I propose, without debate. On the spot to tear and hack them.

There it is, our death and ruin! E_{U} Ah. the fault was all your own, you know it, it was all your doing,

You that brought me here, and why?

Because I wanted an attendant. Pros

Eu Here to close my life in tears.

No, that 's a foolish fear, depend on't,

Eu Why a foolish fear?

Consider, when you're left without an eye, It's impossible in nature, how could you contrive to cry?

Form in rank, Form in rank, CHOR. Then move forward and outflank. Let me see them overpower'd, Hack'd, demolish'd, and devour'd, Neither earth, nor sea, nor sky, Nor woody fastnesses on high, Shall protect them if they fly

Where's the Captain? what detains him? what prevents us to proceed?

On the right there, call the Captain! let him form his troop and lead.

Eu There it is; where can I fly?

PEIS Sirrah, be quiet; wait a bit.

Eu What, to be devour'd amongst them !

PEIS Will your legs or will your wit

Serve to escape them?

I can't tell.

Peis But I can tell; do as you're bid; Fight we must. You see the pot just there before ye;

take the lid

And present it for a shield; the spit will serve you for a spear,

With it you may scare them off, or spike them if they venture near

Eu What can I find to guard my eyes?
PEIS Why, there's the very thing you wish, Two vizard helmets ready made, the cullender and skimming dish

Eu. What a clever, capital, lucky device, sudden and new !

Nicias 1, with all his tactics, is a simpleton to you. Chor. Steady, Birds | present your beaks! in double time, charge and attack!

Pounce upon them, smash the pot-lid, clapperclaw

them, tear and hack

Hoo Tell me, most unworthy creatures, scandal of the feather'd race.

Must I see my friends and kinsmen massacred before my face?

CHOR. What, do you propose to spare them? Where will your forbearance cease, Hesitating to destroy destructive creatures such as these?

Hoo Enemies they might have been; but here they come, with fair design,

1 Nicias was at this time in the chief command of the Sicilian expedition, Alcibiades having been recalled See note 2, p 178. With proposals of advice, for your advantage and for mine.

CHOR. Enemies time out of mind 1 they that have spilt our fathers' blood,

How should they be friends of ours, or give us counsel for our good?

Hoo Friendship is a poor adviser, politicians deep and wise

Many times are forced to learn a lesson from their enemies,

Diligent and wary conduct is the method soon or late

Which an adversary teaches, whilst a friend or intimate

Trains us on to sloth and ease, to ready confidence, to rest

In a careless acquiescence, to believe and hope the best.

Look on earth! behold the nations, all in emulation vying,

Active all, with busy science engineering, fortifying, To defend their hearths and homes, with patriotic industry.

Facing every city round with massy walls of masonry, Tactical devices old they modify with new design, Arms offensive and defensive to perfection they refine, Galleys are equipp'd and arm'd, and armies train'd to discipline

Look to life, in every part, in all they practise, all they know,

Every nation has derived its best instruction from the foe

Chon. We're agreed to grant a hearing, if an enemy can teach

Anything that's wise or useful, let him prove it in his speech

¹ The vast changes and improvement in the practice and the art of war which took place about this time were a subject of general speculation and remark. The concise allusions in the taxt are, therefore, somewhat enlarged in the translation.

PEIS. (aside) Let's retire a pace or two; you see the change in their behaviour

Hoo. Simple justice I require, and I request it as a favour

CHOR Faith and equity require it, and the nation hitherto

Never has refused to take direction and advice from you.

PEIS (aside) They're relenting by degrees; Recover arms and stand at ease

CHOR 1 Back to the rear! resume your station, Ground your wrath and indignation, Sheathe your fury, stand at ease! While I proceed to question these: What design has brought them here? Hoh, there, Hoopoe! can't he hear?

Hoo. What's your question?

CHOR Who are these?

Hoo Strangers from the land of Greece

CHOR What design has brought them thence?

What's their errand or pretence?
Hoo. They come here simply with a view
To settle and reside with you;
Here to remain and here to live

CHOR What is the reason that they give? Hoo A project marvellous and strange CHOR Will it account for such a change, Coming here so vast a distance? Does he look for our assistance To serve a friend or harm a foe?

Hoo. Mighty plans he has to show (Hinted and proposed in brief)
For a power beyond belief,
Ocean, earth, he says, and air,
All creation everywhere,
Everything that's here or there,
An empire and supremacy

¹ Thirteen lines (from 387 to 400), which, unaccompanied by the action on the stage, would appear tiresome and unmeaning, are here omitted

Over all beneath the sky Is attainable by you, Your just dominion and your due. Tell us, was he fool or mad? CHOR. No. believe me, grave and sad. Hoo Did his reasons and replies CHOR. Mark him as discreet and wise? With a force, a depth, a reach Hoo Of judgement, a command of speech. An invention, a facility. An address, a volubility, More than could be thought believable. 'Tis a varlet inconceivable l Let us hear him i let us hear him! Снов. Bid him begin! for raised on high

Our airy fancy soars, and I Am rapt in hope, ready to fly

The King Hoopee now gives some orders in a pacific spirit, directing that all warlike weapons be removed and hung up at the back of the chimney as before. He then calls upon Peisthetairus to communicate to the assembled commonalty the propositions which had been before discussed in private conference between themselves Peisthetairus, however, sees his advantage, and insists upon the previous conclusion of a formal treaty of peace, this is done, and the Chorus swear to it (relapsing for a moment into their real character), 'as they hope to win the prize by an unanimous vote' But if they should fail they imprecate upon themselves the penalty of (gaining the prize notwithstanding, but) 'gaining it only by a casting vote' Peace is proclaimed, the armament is dissolved by proclamation, and the Chorus recommence singing

Hoo (to the Chorus) Here you, take these same arms, in the name of Heaven,

And hang them quietly in the chimney-corner, (turning to Pristhetairus),

And you, communicate your scheme, exhibiting Your proofs and calculations—the discourse

Which they were call'd to attend to.

PEIS

No, not I,

By Jove! unless they agree to an armistice; Such as the little poor baboon, our neighbour, The sword cutler, concluded with his wife; That they shan't bite me, or take unfair advantage In any way

CHOR We won't

PEIS Well, swear it then!
CHOR We swear, by our hope of gaining the first prize

With the general approval and consent Of the whole audience, and of all the judges— And if we fail, may the reproach befall us, Of gaining it only by the casting vote

It should seem that the success of this play must have been a subject of more than usual anxiety, both to the Poet himself, and to the Choregus and his friends we may conceive it to have been intended as a sedative to the mind of the commonalty, excited, as they were at the time, almost to madness by the suspicion of a conspiracy against the religion and laws of the country, a suspicion originating in a profane outrage secretly perpetrated, to a great extent, in mere insolence and wantonness, by some young men of family. In the opinon, however, of the Athenian people, the offence was viewed in a very serious light, as the result of an extensive secret combination (on the part of persons bound and engaged to each other by their common participation in the guilt of sacrilege), preparatory to other attempts still more criminal and dangerous. In this state of things, and while the popular fury and jealousy upon religious subjects was at its height, the Poet ventured to produce this play, in which it will be seen that the burlesque of the national Mythology is carried higher and continued longer than in any of his other existing plays—The confident hopes expressed by the Chorus were not realized, the first prize was assigned to a play, the title of which, the Comastae or Drunken Rioters, seems to imply that its chief interest must have been derived from direct allusions to the cutrage above men tiened and to the individuals suspected to have been en gaged in it.

¹ The wealthy citizen charged with the expense and management of a theatrical entertainment.

But we must return to the Herald dismissing the troops

Her. Hear ye, good people all! the troops are order'd

To take their arms within doors, and consult

To take their arms within doors, and consult On the report and entry to be made Upon our journal of this day's proceedings.

CHOR. Since time began The race of man

Has ever been deceiful, faithless ever Yet may our fears be vain! Speak therefore and explain If in this realm of ours,

Your clearer intellect, searching and clever, Has noticed means or powers

Unknown and undetected, In unambitious indolence reglected. Guide and assist our ignorant endeavour You, for your willing aid and ready wit, Will share with us the common benefit.

Now speak to the business and be not afraid, The Birds will adhere to the truce that we made

The long series of Anapaestic lines which follows, holds the place of the debates which occur in other comedies, and which are conducted in Anapaestic verse. Persthetairus could not properly have been matched with an opponent or antagonist, the uniformity of his speech is however relieved by the interruptions and comments of Euclipides, who acts an under part to him, much in the same style as a Merry Andrew to a Mountebank. Observe that Peisthetairus nover vouchsafes an answer or takes any kind of netice of his companion, but proceeds continuously, except once or twice in reply to the Chorus and the Hoopee

PEIS I'm fill'd with the subject and long to pro

My rhetorical leaven is ready to knead .-

Boy, bring me a crown 1 and a basin and ewer. Ev. Why, what does he mean? Are we banqueting, sure?

Peis. A rhetorical banquet I mean; and I wish To serve them at first with a sumptuous dish, To astound and delight them. 'The grief and compassion

That oppresses my mind on beholding a nation,

A people of sovereigns!2...

CHOR. Sovereigns we!
PEIS Of all the creation! of this man and me,
And of Jupiter too; for observe that your birth
Was before the old Titans, and Saturn and Earth.

CHOR And Earth!

PEIS. I repeat it

CHOR. That 's wonderful news! PEIS Your wonder implies a neglect to peruse And examine old Aesop, from whom you might gather That the lark was embarrass'd to bury his father On account of the then non-existence of Earth; And how to repair so distressing a dearth,

He adopted a method unheard of and new. Chor. If the story you quote is authentic and true,

No doubt can exist of our clear seniority,

And the gods must acknowledge our right to authority.

Eu. Your beaks will be worn with distinction and pride:

The woodpecker's title will scarce be denied; And Jove the pretender will surely surrender.

PEIS . . . Moreover, most singular facts are com-

In proof that the birds were adored by mankind: For instance, the Cock was a sovereign of yore In the empire of Persia, and ruled it before Darius's time; and you all may have heard That his title exists as the 'Persian bird'....

The inverted commas mark the premeditatedly abrupt exordium of Peisthetairus's harangue.

¹ A crown was worn by the public orators when haranguing the people, and also at feasts

Eu And hence you behold him stalk in pride. Majestic and stout, with a royal stride, With his turban upright, a privilege known Reserved to kings and kings alone PEIS

So wide was his empire, so mighty his swav.

That the people of earth to the present day. Attend to his summons and freely obey Tinkers, tanners, cobblers, all.

Are roused from rest at his royal call, And shuffle their shoes on before it is light.

To trudge to the workshop

 $E \sigma$ I warrant you're right, I know to my cost, by the cloak that I lost, It was owing to him I was robb'd and beguiled

For a feast had been made for a neighbour's child, To give it a name, and I went as a guest, And sat there carousing away with the rest, But drinking too deep, I fell soundly asleep. And he began crowing, and I never knowing, But thinking it morning, went off at the warning (With the wine in my pate, to the city gate),
And fell in with a footpad was lying in wait,
Just under the town, and was fairly knock'd down,
Then I tried to call out, but before I could shout, He stripp'd me at once with a sudden pull. Of a bran new mantle of Phrygian wool.

Then the kite was the monarch of Greece heretofore

Hoo Of Greece?

and instructed our fathers of yore, Pers

On beholding a kite, to fall down and adore

Eu Well, a thing that befell me, was comical quite, I threw myself down on beholding a kite, But turning my face up to stare at his flight,
With a coin in my mouth, forgetting my penny,

¹ It was usual with the Greeks to put small pieces of silver coin in their mouths, a custom which the tumpike men of Great Britain continued to retain within the recollection of the writer

I swallow'd it down, and went home without any. PEIS. . . . In Sidon and Egypt the Cuckoo was king:

They wait to this hour for the Cuckoo to sing; And when he begins, he it later or early, They reckon it lawful to gather their barley . . . Eu Ah, thence it comes our harvest cry, Cuckoo, Cuckoo, to the passers-by.

PEIS . . . At an era, moreover, of modern date, Menelaus the king, Agamemnon the great, Had a bird as assessor attending in state, Perch'd on his sceptre, to watch for a share Of fees and emoluments, secret or fair.

Eu Ah, there I perceive I was right in my guess, For when Priam appear'd in his tragical dress, The bird on his sceptre, I plainly could see, Was watching Lysicrates 1 taking a fee

PEIS .. Nay, Jupiter now that usurps the command Appears with an Eagle, appointed to stand As his emblem of empire, a striking example Of authority once so extended and ample: And each of the gods had his separate fowl, Apollo a Hawk, and Minerva an Owl.

Eu² That 's matter of fact, and you're right in the

But what was the reason I wish you'd explain PEIS The reason was this, that the bird should be there

To demand as of right a proportional share Of the entrails and fat, when an offering was made, A suitable portion before them was laid. Moreover you'll find that the race of mankind Always swore by a bird, and it never was heard That they swore by the gods at the time that I mention. And Lampon ³ himself, with a subtle intention,

¹ Of Lysicrates the Scholiast only informs us that he was a person in office known to be in the habit of taking bribes, a description which in relation to those times is hardly a distinction

This speech seems more properly to belong to the Hoopoe
As a substitute for common swearing, some persons (Socrates Adheres to the old immemoral nee.

He perjures and checks us, and success the the govern.

Thus for forth have I proved and shown.

The power and estate that we rence your own.

Now totally broken and exertiseurs.

Now totally broken and overthrown And need I describe your pre-ent tribe, West forlorn exposed to room Distress d, oppress d, never at re-t, Daily pursued with outrage rude With ener and not e of men and boys, Screaming hooting, relling shooting.

Screaming hooting, pelting shooting, The fowler sets his traps and note Twigs of bird hime, loops, and snares, To catch you lidnapp'd unnwares, Lyen within the temples pale

They set you forth to public sale, Pawd and handled most severely. And not content with roasting merely, In an insolent device Sprinkle you with cheese and spice, With nothing of respect or favour, Derogating from your flavour

Or, for a further outrage, have to Soused in greasy sauce and gravy

Hoo Sad and dismal is the story,
Human stranger, which you tell,
Of our fathers' ancient glory,
Ere the fated empire fell
From the depth of degradation,
A benignant happy fate
Sends you to restore the nation,
To redeem and save the state
I consign to your protection,
Able to preserve them best,
All my objects of affection,

My wife, my children, and my nest among the rest) made use of less offensive explctives, swearing by the dog or by the goose '—Lampon was a soothsayer, and thought it right probably to be scrupulous in using the name of the god He is mentioned again in this play

If the reader should be inclined to pass over the next hundred lines, I should feel no wish to detain him. The subject of them has been pretty nearly anticipated, and the whole play is in fact too long

Hoo. Explain then the method you mean to pursue To recover our empire and freedom anew. For thus to remain in dishonour and scorn, Our life were a burthen no more to be borne

PEIS Then I move, that the birds shall in common repair

To a centrical point, and encamp in the air; And intrench and enclose it, and fortify there; And build up a rampart impregnably strong, Enormous in thickness, enormously long, Bigger than Babylon, solid and tall, With bricks and bitumen! a wonderful wall

Ev Bricks and bitumen! I'm longing to see What a daub of a building the city will be!

PEIS . As soon as the fabric is brought to an end.

A herald or envoy to Jove we shall send,
To require his immediate prompt abdication;
And if he refuses, or shows hesitation,
Or evades the demand, we shall further proceed,
With legitimate warfare, avow'd and decreed;
With a warning and notices, formally given,
To Jove, and all others residing in heaven,
Forbidding them ever to venture again
To trespass on our atmospheric domain,
With scandalous journeys, to visit a list
Of Alcmenas and Semeles, if they persist,
We warn them that means will be taken moreover
To stop their gallanting and acting the lover.

Another ambassador also will go
Dispatch'd upon earth, to the people below,
To notify briefly the fact of accession,
And enforcing our claims upon taking possession;
With orders in future, that every suitor,
Who applies to the gods with an offering made,
Shall begin with a previous offering paid

To a ruitable Bird, of a kind and degree That accords with the ged, who occur he be In Venue a fanc, if a victim is slain First let a Sparrow be fe sted with grain When rifts and oblittions to Septupe are made To the Drake let a tribute of barley be paid Let the Cormorant a appetite ! first be appeared, And let Hercules then have an Ox for his feast If you offer to love as the sovereign above, A Ram for his own let the Golden-grown, Is a rovereign Pird be duly preferr d. I casted and honour'd, in right of his reign. With a jolly fat pismire offer d and slain

Fu A pismire, how droll ! I shall laugh till I burst ! Let Jupiter thunder, and threaten his worst!

But mankind will they, think ye, respect and ndore.

If they see us all flying the same as before? They will recken us merely as Magnies and Crows Pris. Poh! nonsense, I tell yo no blockhead but

That Mercury flies there is Iris too Homer informs us how sho flew 'Smooth as a Dove she went sailing along' And pinions of gold, both in picture and song, To Cunid and Victory fairly belong

Hoo But Jove's thunder has wings, if he send but a vollev.

Mankind for a time may abandon us wholly
Pers What then, we shall raise a graniverous

To sweep their whole crops with a ravonous swoop If Ceres is able, perhaps sho may deign To assist their distress with a largess of grain

EU No, no! slie'll be making excuses, I warrant.
Pers Then the Crows will be sent on a different errand.

To pounce all at onco, with a sudden surprise,

1 With the writers of the old comedy extreme voracity was the characteristic attribute of Hercules

On their oxen and sheep, to peck out their eyes,
And leave them stone-blind for Apollo to cure:
He'll try it; he'll work for his salary sure!
Eu Let the cattle alone, I've two beeves of my

Let me part with them first, and then do your worst PEIS But, if men shall acknowledge your merit and worth.

As equal to Saturn, to Neptune, and Earth, And to everything else, we shall freely bestow

All manner of blessings

Explain them and show. Hoo For instance · if locusts arrive to consume Pers All their hopes of a crop, when the vines are in bloom, A squadron of Owls may demolish them all, The Midges moreover, which canker and gall The figs and the fruit, if the Thrush is employ'd, By a single battalion will soon be destroy'd.

Hoo But wealth is their object, and how can we grant it?

Pers We can point them out mines; and our help will be wanted

To inspect and direct navigation and trade, Their voyages all will be easily made, With a saving of time and a saving of cost; And a seaman in future will never be lost

Hoo How so?

Pers We shall warn them 'Now hasten to sail.

Now keep within harbour, your voyage will fail' Eu How readily then will a fortune be made! I'll purchase a vessel and venture on trade

PEIS 1. And old treasure conceal'd will again be reveal'd:

The Birds as they know it will readily show it

1 The want of stability and good faith, both in the Government and individuals, obliged the Greeks to secure their moneyed capital by concealment Hence the vast collections of ancient coin which appear in the cabinets of antiquarians Observe the shallow shatter-brained character of Euclpides

'Tis a saying of old, 'My silver and gold Are so safely secreted, and closely interr'd, No creature can know it, excepting a Bird.

No creature can know it, excepting a Bird'
Eu I'll part with my vessel, I'll go not aboard,

I'll purchase a mattock and dig up a hoard.

Hoo We're clear as to wealth, but the blessing of health

Is the gift of the gods

PEIS It will make no such odds
If they're going on well, they'll be healthy still,
And none are in health that are going on ill

Hoo But then for longevity, that is the gift Of the gods

PEIS But the Birds can afford them a lift, And allow them a century, less or more Hoo How so?

PEIS From their own individual store,
They may reckon it fair, to allot them a share, ¹
For old proverbs affirm, that the final term
Of a Raven's life exceeds the space
Of five generations of human race

Hoo 2 What need have we then for Jove as a king?

Surely the Birds are a better thing!

PEIS Surely! Surely! First and most,
We shall economize the cost
Of marbled domes and gilded gates
The Birds will live at cheaper rates,
Lodging, without shame or scorn,
In a maple or a thorn,
The most exalted and divine
Will have an olive for his shrine.
We need not run to foreign lands

We need not run to foreign lands, Or Ammon's temple in the sands,

1 The origin of this notion of life being transferable cannot be accounted for, in the form of a wish, it appears to have been common

² This speech must belong to the Hoopoe. Aristophanes would not leave the result of the scene to be summed up hy such a silly fellow as Euclpides. We see heades that Peisthetairus replies to it. He never replies to Euclpides.

But perform our easy vows Among the neighbouring shrubs and boughs; Paying our oblations fairly With a pennyworth of barley.

CHOR 1 O best of all envoys, suspected before, Now known and approved, and respected the more; To you we resign the political lead,

Our worthy director in council and deed.

Elated with your bold design, I swear and vow. If resolutely you combine Your views and interest with mine, In steadfast counsels as a trusty friend, Without deceit, or guile, or fraudful end: They that rule in haughty state, The gods, ere long shall abdicate Their high command, And yield the scentre to my rightful hand.

Then reckon on us for a number and force; As on you we rely for a ready resource, In council and policy, trusting to you To direct the design we resolve to pursue

Hoo That's well, but we've no time, by Jove! to loster.

And dawdle and postpone like Nicias 2 We should be doing something First, however, I must invite you to my roosting place, This nest of mine, with its poor twigs and leaves. And tell me what your names are? Certainly: PEIS.

My name is Persthetarrus 8

And your friend?

² The Athenians were at that time disappointed at Nicias's delay, in not advancing immediately against Syracuse

Peisthetairus answers like a man of sense, Euelpides like

¹ There can be no doubt that this speech belongs to the Chorus, though it may seem difficult to account for what is said of the sceptre, which it should seem ought rather to belong to the king The Hoopoe in answer alludes to the inveterate vice of all Choruses—dawdling and inefficiency

Euclpides from Thria Eπ

Hoo Well, vou're welcome-

Both of ve

We're obliged. Pers.

Walk in together Hoo

Go first then, if you please. Pris

No, pray move forward. Hon But bless me-stop, pray-just for a single

Let's see-do tell me-explain-how shall we manage To live with you-with a person wearing wings? Being both of us unfledged?

Perfectly well! Hoo Yes, but I must observe, that Aesop's fables Pris Report a case in point—the fox and eagle The fox repented of his fellowship,

And with good cause, you recollect the story 1
Hoo Oh! don't be alarm'd, we'll give you a certain root

That immediately promotes the growth of wings Pers Come, let's go in then, Xanthias, do you mınd.

And Manodorus. follow with the bundles.

a simpleton, and we see the effect of it on the king's mind There is a momentary pause in the invitation, before they are hoth included in it.

1 Peisthetairus has shown that he is not deficient in valour upon compulsion But a character of extreme subtlety is always prone to suspicion, and the recollection of an example derived from ancient documents in Aesop's Fables, intimidates him for a moment, and makes him distrustful of the frank invitation of the king He is then very much ashamed of himself, and, like Bacchus and Master Slender, begins giving orders to his servants, and is importunate and hurried and absurd Thus the poet, who wanted some lines of strong importunity to mark the entrance of his favourite Musician, has contrived to give them to his principal personage, and at the same time to mark his character itself more distinctly, by this momentary failure of his habitual self possession, originating in the apprehension of having lowered himself in the estimation of his host.

2 These slaves do not appear elsewhere in the play, it might be doubted whether they appear here, and whether Peisthetairus does not call for them in mere nervous absence of mind.

CHOR. Holloh!

What's the matter? Hoo.

Go in with your party, CHOR.

And give them a jolly collation and hearty But the Bird to the Muses and Graces so dear, The lovely, sweet Nightingale, bid her appear,

And leave her amongst us, to sport with us here.

Peis (with a hurried, nervous eagerness)

O yes, by Jove! indeed, you must indulge them; Do, do me the favour, call her from the thicket! For heaven's sake-let me entreat you-bring her here, And let us have a sight of her ourselves

Hoo (with grave good-breeding, implying a kind of rebuke to the fussy importunity into which Peisthe-

TAIRUS had fallen)

Since it is your wish and pleasure, it must be so; Come here to the strangers, Procne! show yourself!

PEIS O Jupiter! what a graceful, charming bird!

What a beautiful creature it is!

Ill tell ye what;

I could find in my heart to rumple her feathers Pris And what an attire she wears, all bright with gold!

EU Well, I should like to kiss her for my part. PEIS You blockhead! With that beak she'd run

you through

Eu By Jove, then, one must treat her like an egg; Just clear away the shell and kiss her-thus

Hoo (gravely disapproving the liberties which are taken in his presence) Let's go!
PEIS Go first, then, and good luck go with us

 $\Gamma Exeunt$

The Actors having left the stage, the Parabasis ought to follow —It is here prefaced in a singular way by a com-plimentary song from the Chorus, addressed to the favourite female Musician

CHOR. O lovely, sweet companion meet, From morn to night my sole delight, My little, happy, gentle mate,

You come, you come, O lucky fate!
Roturning here with new delight,!
To charm the sight, to charm the sight,
And charm the car
Come then, anew combine
Your notes in harmony with mine,
And with a tono beyond compare
Begin your Anapaestic air

The sudden passion for science among the Athenians, and the ridicule of it among the comic poets, have been already noticed

Much might be said on the subject of the most splendid passage of the Parabasis, and of the philosophic system of which it presents the traces but this would lead to considerations very remote from the imitation of actual life and manners and character, which, as constituting the most singular excellence of the author, it has been the object of the translator to illustrato

Of the Parabasis before us, the merits are well known, and perhaps no passage in Aristophahes has been oftener quoted with admiration. To bring the most sublime subjects within the verge of Comedy, and to treat of them with humour and fancy, without falling into vulgarity or offending the principles of good taste, seems a task which no poet, whom we know of, could have accomplished though, if we were possessed of the words of Epicharmus, it is possible that we might see other specimens of the same style

Ye Children of Man! whose life is a span, Protracted with sorrow from day to day, Naked and featherless, feeble and querulous, Sickly, calamitous creatures of clay! Attend to the words of the Sovereign Birds (Immortal, illustrious, lords of the air), Who survey from on high, with a merciful eye, Your struggles of misery, labour, and care Whence you may learn and clearly discern Such truths as attract your inquisitive turn,

¹ See what is said p 181 She had been engaged for this perfermance, and was newly arrived

Which is busied of late with a mighty debate, A profound speculation about the creation, And organical life, and chaotical strife, With various notions of heavenly motions, And rivers and oceans, and valleys and mountains, And sources of fountains, and meteors on high, And stars in the sky . . . We propose by and by (If you'll listen and hear), to make it all clear. And Prodicus henceforth shall pass for a dunce, When his doubts are explain'd and expounded at once.

Before the creation of Aether and Light, Chaos and Night together were plight, In the dungeon of Erebus foully bedight. Nor Ocean, or Air, or substance was there, Or solid or rare, or figure or form, But horrible Tartarus ruled in the storm:

At length, in the dreary chaotical closet
Of Erebus old, was a privy deposit,
By Night the primaeval in secrecy laid—
A Mystical Egg, that in silence and shade
Was brooded and hatch'd, till time came about,
And Love, the delightful, in glory flew out,
In rapture and light, exulting and bright,
Sparkling and florid, with stars in his forehead,
His forehead and hair, and a flutter and flare,
As he rose in the air, triumphantly furnish'd
To range his dominions on glittering pinions,
All golden and azure, and blooming and burnish'd:

He soon, in the murky Tartarean recesses, With a hurricane's might, in his fiery caresses Impregnated Chaos; and hastily snatched To being and life, begotten and hatch'd, The primitive Birds: but the Deities all, The celestial Lights, the terrestrial Ball, Were later of birth, with the dwellers on earth More tamely combined, of a temperate kind; When chaotical mixture approach'd to a fixture.

Our antiquity proved, it remains to be shown That Love is our author, and master alone; Like him we can ramble and gambol and fly O'er ocean and earth, and aloft to the sky And, all the world over, we're friends to the lover, And when other means fail, we are found to prevail, When a Peacock or Pheasant is sent as a present.

All lessons of primary daily concern
You have learnt from the Birds, and continue to learn,
Your best benefactors and early instructors,
We give you the warning of seasons returning

When the Cranes are arranged, and muster affoat In the middle air, with a creaking note, Steering away to the Lybian sands, Then careful farmers sow their lands, The crazy vessel is haul'd ashore, The sail, the ropes, the rudder, and oar Are all unshipp'd, and housed in store

The shopherd is warn'd, by the Kite reappearing, To muster his flock, and be ready for shearing

You quit your old cloak at the Swallow's behest, In assurance of summer, and purchase a vest.

For Delphi, for Ammon, Dodona, in fine For every oracular temple and shrine, The Birds are a substitute equal and fair, For on us you depend, and to us you repair For counsel and aid when a marriage is made, A purchase, a bargain, a venture in trade Unlucky or lineky, whatever has struck ye, An ox or an ass that may happen to pass, A voice in the street, or a slave that you meet, A name or a word by chance overheard, If you deem it an omen, you call it a Bird, And if birds are your omens, it clearly will follow That birds are a proper prophetic Apollo

Then take us as gods, and yon'll soon find the odds,¹ We'll serve for all uses, as prophets and muses,

¹ The series of short lines at the end of a Parabasis was to be repeated with the utmost volubility and rapidity—as if in a single breath—A comic effect is sometimes produced in this way on our own stage.

[898-926

We'll give ye fine weather, we'll live here together; We'll not keep away, scornful and proud, a top of a cloud

206

(In Jupiter's way); but attend every day To prosper and bless all you possess, And all your affairs, for yourselves and your heirs. And as long as you live, we shall give You wealth and health, and pleasure and treasure. In ample measure:

And never bilk you of pigeon's milk Or potable gold; you shall live to grow old, In laughter and mirth, on the face of the earth, Laughing, quaffing, carousing, boozing, Your only distress shall be the excess

Of ease and abundance and happiness.

SEMICHORUS.

We see here a comic imitation of the Tragic Choruses of Phrynichus, a poet older than Aeschylus, of whom Aristophanes always speaks with respect, as an improver of music and poetry,—arts which, in the judgement of the ancients, were deemed inseparable, or, if disjoined, essentially defective and imperfect

Muse, that in the deep recesses Of the forest's dreary shade, Vocal with our wild addresses; Or in the lonely lowly glade Attending near, art pleased to hear Our humble bill, tuneful and shrill:

When to the name of omnipotent Pan Our notes we raise, or sing in praise Of mighty Cybele, from whom we began, Mother of nature and every creature, Wing'd or unwing'd, of birds or man; Aid and attend, and chant with me The music of Phrynichus, open and plain, The first that attempted a loftier strain, Ever busy like the bee, with the sweets of harmony.

EPIRRHEMA

Is there any person present sitting a spectator here, Who desires to pass his time freely without restraint or fear?

Should he wish to colonize, he never need be check'd or chid

For the trifling indiscretions which the testy laws forbid Parricides are in esteem among the birds we deem it fair,

A combat honourably fought betwixt a game-cock and

ms deir

There the branded runagate, branded and mottled in the face,
Will be deem'd a motley bird, a motley mark is no disgrace.

Spintharus, the Phrygian born, will pass a muster

there with ease, Counted as a Phrgyian fowl, and even Execestides,1

Once a Carran and a slave, may there be nobly born and free,

Plume humself on his descent, and batch a recover

Plume himself on his descent, and hatch a proper pedigree

SEMICHORUS

This second sample of the style of Phrynichus may serve to give us a more distinct idea of it. It seems to have been one of essential grandeur and harmony, but trespassing occasionally into the regions of nonsense.

Thus the Swans in chorus follow,
On the mighty Thracian stream,
Hymning their eternal theme—
Praise to Bacchus and Apollo

The welkin rings with sounding wings, With songs and ories and melodies, Up to the thunderous Aether ascending

1 Already noted as a foreigner in the first scene of this play.

Whilst all that breathe on earth beneath. The beasts of the wood, the plain, and the flood.

In panic amazement, are crouching and bending, With the awful qualm of a sudden calm,

Ocean and air in silence blending

The ridge of Olympus is sounding on high, Appalling with wonder the lords of the sky,

And the Muses and Graces. Enthroned in their places, Join in the solemn symphony.

ANTEPIRRHEMA.

Nothing can be more delightful than the having wings to wear!

A spectator sitting here, accommodated with a pair, Might for instance (if he found a tragic chorus dull and heavy)

Take his flight and dine at home, and if he did not choose to leave ye,

Might return in better humour when the weary drawl was ended.

Introduce then wings in use—believe me, matters will be mended ·

Patroclides 1 would not need to sit there and befoul

Flying off, he might return, eased in a moment, clean and neat

Trust me, wings are all in all! Dutrephes has mounted

Than the rest of our aspirants, soaring on his wings of wicker ·

Basket-work and crates and hampers first enabled him to fly, 2

¹ The posthumous celebrity of Patroclides is not confined to this single event He survived the accident many years, and was the author of a very salutary decree upon the principles advocated by the Poet in the epirrhema of the 'Frogs', but (as in the in-stance before us) he was again fatally too late—The decree was not passed till after the destruction of the navy at Aegos Potamos

² His property consisted in a manufactory of this kind, by which he had grown rich.

First a captain, then promoted to command the cavalry. With his fortunes daily rising, office and preferment

An illustrious, enterprising, airy, gallant Cockatoo

The oxolnsive functions of the Chorus being now at an end, the persons of the Drama appear again upon the stage. Peisthetairus and Enelpides having been both in the meanwhile equipped with a sumptuous pair of wings -They are supposed to have been entertained behind the scenes with a royal collation in the palace of the Hoopee -- Peisthetairus is accordingly in extreme good humonr, and being now in the height of his advancement, recollects that it will be right to behave to his former comrade with the hearty familiarity of an old acquaintance, he accordingly begins, with a ludicrous simile 1 on his appearance (a species of raillery common among the Athenians, but which was considered as the lowest kind of jocularity) He takes his friend's retort in perfect good humour, and Enelpides is admitted as a third person, to consult, with him and the King, upon some unimportant matters, such as the name of the new city, and the choice of a patron deity, upon all which topics his idle buffoonish humour is not misplaced. But a more delicate point is afterwards brought into discussion (nothing less than the choice of a chief commander for the Citadel) which Euelpides treats with the same silly drollery as before. Peisthetairus is irritated, or pretends to be so, and dismisses him in a tone of anthority. which the other resents, and appears on the point of mutinying, upon which Peisthetairus smoothes him down again, as briefly as possible, and having accomplished this point, immediately turns away from him to call a servant.

PEIS Well, there it is! Such a comical set out, By Jove, I never saw! Why, what's the matter?

¹ This is the sort of raillery which Bacchus prohibits in the contest between Euripides and Aeschylus, and of which we heve a specimen in the Wasps, 1308 -Some modern traveller has told us that abusive similes in alternate extempore verse serve for an amusement, at this day, to the boatmen of the Nile.

What are you laughing at?

At your pen feathers; PEIS I'll tell ye exactly now the thing you're like; You're just the perfect image of a Goose, Drawn with a pen in a writing-master's flourish.

Eu And you're like a pluck'd Blackbird to a tittle. PEIS Well, then, according to the line in Aeschylus, 'It's our own fault, the feathers are our own.'

Eu Come, what's to be done?

Hoo First we must choose a name, Some grand, sonorous name, for our new city; Then we must sacrifice

I think so too. $\mathbf{E}\mathbf{v}$ PEIS Let's see—let's think of a name—what shall

What say ye to the Lacedaemonian name? Sparta sounds well—suppose we call it Sparta

Eu Sparta! What, Sparto? 2—Rushes 1—no, not I, I'd not put up with Sparto for a mattress, Much less for a city—we're not come to that PEIS Come, then, what name shall it be?

Eu. Something appropriate, Something that sounds majestic, striking, and grand, Alluding to the clouds and the upper regions
Peis. What think ye of Clouds and Cuckoos?

Cuckoo-cloudlands Or Nephelococcugia?

HooThat will do: A truly noble and sonorous name!
Eu I wonder if that Nephelococcugia Is the same place I've heard of; people tell me That all Theagenes's rich possessions Lie there; and Aeschines's whole estate Pers Yes! 3 and a better country it is by far

1 Aeschylus alludes to a fable in which an eagle complains of being wounded by an arrow feathered from his own wings

² Sparto still retains its name, and is still used for mattresses and occasionally for cordage

Many Athenians (as Miltiades, Alcibiades, and Thucydides the Historian) were proprietors of large estates in Chersonese and Than all that land in Thrace, the fabulous plain Of Phlegra, where those carth born landed giants

Were bullied and out-vapour'd by the gods Eu It will be a genteelish, smart concern, I reckon.

This city of ours - Which of the deities

Shall we have for a patron? We must weave our mantle. Our sacred mantle, of course—the yearly mantle 1 To one or other of 'cm

Well, Minerva?

Why should not we have Minerva? She's establish'd.

Let her continue, she'll do mighty well

Lu No-there I object, for a well-order'd city The example would be seandalous, to see The goddess, a female born, in complete armour

From head to foot and Cleisthenes with a distaff Pers What warden will ye appoint for the Eagle tower.

Your Citadel the fort upon the rock?

Hoo That charge will rest with a chief of our own

Or Persian race, a chicken of the game,

An eminent warrior

Oh my chick-hiddy-Eπ My little master I should like to see him Strutting about and roosting on the rock

PERS Come you now! please to step to the atmo sphere.

And give a look to the work, and help the workmen, And between whiles, fetch bricks and tiles, and such Draw water, stamp the mortar,-do it barefoot. Chmb up the ladders, tumble down again.

along the coasts of Thrace Theagenes, it seems, and Aeschines, boasting of wealth which they did not possess, chose to talk of their estates in Thrace. In the last century the West Indies was the usual locality assigned to fabulous estates —Thrace was also mythologically fabulous, as the field of hattle between Jupiter and the Titans. f See Knights, p 122 note 1

Ridiculed for his effeminacy in various comedies.

Keep constant watch and ward; conceal your watchlights.

Then go the rounds, and give the countersign, Till you fall fast asleep Send heralds off,

—A brace of them—one to the gods above,
And another, down below there, to mankind.

And another, down below there, to mankind Bid them, when they return, inquire for me

Eu. For me! for me! You may be hang'd for me. Peis. Come, friend, go where I bid you, never mind; The business can't go on without you, anyhow. It's just a sacrifice to these new deities,

That I must wait for, and the priest that's coming. Holloh, you boy there! bring the basin and ewer!

In the passage which follows, the author ridicules the rage for vulgar realities (a corruption of the theatric art, essentially destructive of all illusion, as we have witnessed at home, with real water, real horses, real elephants) The stage of Athens, it should seem, had been degraded by a real sacrifice, the paltriness of such a spectacle is marked by the magnificent exhortation of the Chorus, contrasted with the meanness of the execution which they anticipate.

CHOR. We urge, we exhort you, and advise, To ordain a mighty sacrifice, And before the gods to bring

A stupendous offering;

—Either a sheep or some such thing!—
To please the critics of the age,
Sacrificed upon the stage —
Sound amain the Pythian strain!

Let Chaeris 1 be brought here to sing.

PEIS Have done there with your puffing—Heaven and Earth,

What's here? I've seen a many curious things, But never saw the like of this before,

¹ Chaeris, a bad musician (the constant butt of the comic poets), is called for, to complete the shabbiness of the performance. His representative, the Crow (who is the Chaeris among the birds), sounds some discordant notes till Peisthetairus stops him

A Crow with a flute and a mouthpiece Priest, your office

Perform it! Sacrifice to the new deities! PRI. I will—but where's the boy gone with the hasket?

Let us pray to the holy flame. And the holy Hawk that guards the same. To the sovereign Deities,

All and each, of all degrees, Female and male!

Hail, thou Hawk of Sumum, hail! CHOR. PRI. To the Delian and the Pythian Swan. And to the Latonian Quail.

All hailt

To the Bird of awful stature. CHOR. Mother of Gods, mother of Man. Great Cybele! nurse of Nature! Glorious Ostrich, hear our cry! Fearful and enormous creature. Hugest of all things that fly. O preserve and prosper us. Thou mother of Cleocritus ! 1 Grant the blessings that we seek For us, and for the Chians eke!

That's right, the Chians-don't forget the Pers

Chians ! P_{RL} To the Heroes, Birds, and Heroes' sons, We call at once, we call and cry, To the Woodpecker, the Jay, the Pie, To the Mallard and the Widgeon. To the Ringdove and the Pigeon.

To the Petrel and Sea-mew. To the Dottrel and Curlew. To the Vultures and the Hawks, To the Cormorants and Storks. To the Rail, to the Quail,

To the Peewit, to the Tomtit-

¹ Of Cleocritus nothing is known except that he was unfortunate in his figure, which was thought to resemble that of an ostrich.

Peisthetairus, who can do everything better than everybody else, undertakes to perform the sacrifice. This is sufficiently in character. By making him the chief operator, a greater comic effect is given to the series of interruptions which disturb him, until in despair he determines to transfer the sacrifice elsewhere. In this way the Poet avoids the vulgar reality which he had before indiculed

PEIS Have done there! call no more of 'em; are you mad?

Inviting all the Cormorants and Vultures, For a victim such as this! Why don't you see, A Kite at a single swoop would carry it off?

Get out of my way there with your Crowns and Fillets !

I'll do it myself! I'll make the sacrifice!

PRIEST Then must I commence again,
In a simple humble strain;
And invite the gods anew,
To visit us—but very few—
Or only just a single one,

All alone

In a quiet easy way;
Wishing you may find enough,

If you dine with us to-day;

Our victim is so poor and thin,

Merely bones, in fact, and skin

PEIS We sacrifice and pray to the winged deities.

Enter a Poet, very ragged and shabby, with a very mellifluous, submissive, mendicatory demeanour. Peisthetairus, the essential man of business and activity, entertaining a supreme contempt for his profession and person, is at no great pains to conceal it, but recollecting, at the same time, that it is advisable to secure the suffrages of the literary world, and that the character of a patron is creditable to a great man, he patronizes him accordingly, not at his own expense, but by bestowing upon him certain articles of apparel put in requisition for that purpose.

¹ Ridicule of the vulgar reality, the poor half-starved sheep being standing on the stage

This first act of confiscation is directed against the property of the church, the Scholiast informs us that he begins by stripping the Priest

POET

' For the festive, happy day, Muse, propare an early lay To Nophelococcugia'

PEIS What's here to do? What are you? Where do you come from?

POET A humble menial of the Muses' train.

As Homer expresses it.

A menial, are you. Pers

With your long hair? 1 A menial?

'Tis not that No !-but professors of the poetical art Are simply styled, the 'Menials of the Muses.'

As Homer expresses it.

Pris Aye, the Muse has given you A ragged livery Well, but friend, I say-

Friend! Poet! What the plague has brought you here?
POET I've made an Ode upon your new built City,

And a charming composition for a Chorus,

And another, in Simonides's manner

PEIS (in a sharp cross examining tone.) When were they made?

What time? How long ago?
From early date, I celebrate in song

The noble Nephelococcugian state. PEIS That's strange, when I'm just sacrificing here.

For the first time, to give the town a name.

Intimations, swift as air. POET To the Muses' ear are carried. Swifter than the speed and force Of the flery footed horse,

Hence, the tidings never tarried . Father, patron, mighty lord.

1 Slaves were forbidden to wear long hair

The Scholiast informs us that these lines are in ridicule of certain mendicatory passages in the Odes of Pindar, one in particular, addressed to Hiero on the foundation of a new city

Founder of the rising state, What thy bounty can afford, Be it little, be it great, With a quick resolve incline To bestow on me and mine

PEIS. This fellow will breed a bustle, and make mischief,

If we don't give him a trifle, and get rid of him You there, you've a spare waistcoat, pull it off! And give it this same clever ingenious poet—
There, take the waistcoat, friend! Ye seem to want it!

POET. Freely, with a thankful heart,

What the bounteous hand bestows,

Is received in friendly part; But amid the Thracian snows.

Or the chilly Scythian plain,

He the wanderer, cold and lonely,

With an under-waistcoat only, Must a further wish retain.

Which, the Muse, averse to mention,

To your gentle comprehension Trusts her enigmatic strain

PEIS I comprehend it enough, you want a jerkin. Here, give him yours; one ought to encourage genius There, take it, and good-bye to ye!

POET 1 Well, I'm going; And, as soon as I get to the town, I'll set to work.

And finish something, in this kind of way.

'Seated on your golden throne,

Muse, prepare a solemn ditty

To the mighty, To the flighty,

To the cloudy, quivering, shivering, To the lofty-seated city,

PEIS Well, I should have thought, that jerkin might have cured him

¹ The Poet withdraws gradually, turning round and reciting. Peisthetairus does not appear to take notice, but watches till he is fairly gone.

Of his 'quiverings and shiverings' How the plague Did the fellow find us out? I should not have thought it Come, once again, go round with the basin and ewer Peace 1 Silence, silence!

Enter a Soothsayer, with a great air of arrogance and self-importance. He comes on the authority of a book of Oracles (which he pretends to possess, but which he never produces), in virtue of which he lays claim to certain sacrificial perquisites and fees. Peisthetairus encounters him with a different version, composed upon the spot, in virtue of which he dismisses the Soothsayer with a good lashing.

Stop the sacrifice!

Peis What are you?

SOOTH, A Soothsayer, that's what I am

PEIS The worse luck for ye

Sooth. Friend, are you in your senses? Don't trifle absurdly with religious matters. Here's a prophecy of Bakis, which expressly Alludes to Nophelococcugia!

PEIS How came it, then, you never prophesied

Your prophecies, before the town was built?

Sooth. The spirit withheld me PEIS And is it allowable now,

To give us a communication of them?

Sooth Hem I

'Moreover when the Crows and Daws unite,
To build and settle, in the midway right
Between tall Corinth and fair Sicyon's height.
Then to Pandora let a milk white Goat
Be slain, and offer'd, and a comely cont
Given to the Soothsayer, and shoes a pair,
When he to you this oracle shall bear'

PEIS Are the shoes mention'd?

SOOTH. (pretending to feel for his papers) Look at the book, and see!

'And let him have the entrails for his share.'
Pers. Are the entrails mention'd?

1 Seep. 146 in the Knights where there is the same allusion to disputes on the authentic copies of oracles.

SOOTH. (as before) Look at the book, and see! 'If you, predestined youth shall do these things, Then you shall soar aloft, on eagle's wings; But, if you do not, you shall never be An Eagle, nor a Hawk, nor bird of high degree'

PEIS Is all this there?

SOOTH. (as before.) Look at the book, and see! Peis This oracle differs most remarkably

From that which I transcribed in Apollo's temple

'If at the sacrifice ., ' which you prepare, An uninvited vagabond . . . should dare To interrupt you, and demand a share, Let cuffs and buffets . . . be the varlet's lot. Smite him between the ribs . . . and spare him not'

SOOTH Nonsense you're talking!

PEIS (with the same action as the Socthsayer, as if he were feeling for papers.) Look at the book, and see! 'Thou shalt in no wise heed them, or forbear To lash and smite those Eagles of the air, Neither regard their names, for it is written, Lampon and Diopeithes shall be smitten.'

SOOTH. Is all this there?

Peis (producing a horsewhip.) Look at the book, and see!

Get out, with a plague and a vengeance

Sooth. Oh dear! oh! Peis Go soothsay somewhere else, you rascal, run! [Exit Soothsayer.

Meton the Astronomer appears, encumbered with a load of mathematical instruments, which are disposed about his person. He advances with short steps, a straight back, and his chin in the air, modifying, by what he conceives to be a tone of condescending familiarity, a manner of habitual self-importance.

MET I'm come, you see, to join you PEIS (aside) (Another plague!)

¹ The breaks in the text... may serve to indicate what was more distinctly expressed by the actor, viz that Peisthetairus's oracle is an extempore production

For what? What's your design? Your plan, your notion?

Your scheme,—your apparatus,—your equipment, Your outfit? What's the meaning of it all?

MET I mean to take a geometrical plan Of your atmosphere—to allot it, and survey it In a scientific form.

PEIS In the name of heaven! Who are ye and what? What name? What manner of man?

MET Who am I and what? Meton's my name, well known

In Greece, and in the village of Colonos

Pris (going up to him and pulling them about) But tell me pray, -these implements, these articles, What are they meant for?

Mer These are-Instruments /

An atmospherical geometrical scale.

First, you must understand, that the atmosphere Is form'd,—in a manner,—altogether,—partly, In the fashion of a furnace, or a funnel,

I take this circular are, with the moveable arm. And so, by shifting it round, till it coincides

At the angle .- you understand me? Pris Not in the least. MET. (with animation and action illustrative of the proposed plan.) I obtain a true division, with the quadrature

Of the equilateral circle Here, I trace Your market-place, in the centre, with the streets,— Converging mwards,—and the roads, diverging— From the circular wall, without—like solar rays From the circular circumference of the Sun.

PEIS (in a pretended soliloguy, then calling to him with a tone of mystery and alarm)

Another Thales ! absolutely, a Thales !-

Mcton 1

MET (startled) Why, what's the matter? You're aware That I've a regard for you. Take my advice .

Don't be seen here—Withdraw yourself,—abscond! MET Is there any alarm or risk?

Pers Why, much the same As it might be in Lacedaemon There's a bustle Of expelling aliens, people are dragg'd out From the inns and lodgings, with a deal of uproar, And blows and abuse in plenty, to be met with In the public streets

MET. A popular tumult—heh? PEIS (scandalized at the supposition.) Oh, fie! no, nothing of that kind

MET. How do you mean then?

PEIS. We're carrying into effect a resolution Adopted lately, to discard and cudgel— Coxcombs and Mountebanks—of every kind ¹

 \mathbf{Mer} Perhaps-I had best withdraw.

But yet, I would not answer for it, neither, Perhaps, you may be too late; the blows I mention'd Are coming—close upon you—there they come!

PEIS Did I not tell you and give you warning?

Get out, you coxcomb, find out by your Geometry The road you came, and measure it back you'd best.

[Exit Meton.

A Commissioner from Athens advances with an air of importance and ascendancy; like other consequential persons sent on a foreign mission he wishes it to be understood that he considers it a sort of banishment

Is nobody here? None of the Proxem, To receive and attend upon me? What's all this? Sardanapalus ² in person come amongst us!

¹ During this speech Peisthetairus keeps his eye quietly fixed upon the Astronomer ² A name proverbial for pomp and luxury.

Com. I come, appointed as Commissioner To Nephelococcugia

PEIS. A Commissioner!

What brings you here?

COM. A paltry scrap of paper, A trifling silly decree, that sent me away
Here to this place of yours

PEIS Well now! suppose, To make things easy on both sides—could not you Just take your salary at once, and so return, Without any further trouble?

Com. Truly yes, I've other affairs at home a speech and a motion, That I meant to have made m the general assembly, About a business, that I took in hand

On the part of my friend Pharnaces, the satrap PEIS Agreed then, and farewell. Here, take your salary

Com. What's here?

[Peisthetairus has held out his left hand as if with an offer of money, he grasps the right hand of the Commissioner, and with this advantage proceeds to buffet him.

PEIS A motion on the part of Pharnaces 1 Com. Bear witness here 1 I'm beaten and abused In my character of Commissioner I Get out ! PEIS With your balloting box and all. It's quite a shame, Quite scandalous! They send commissioners here, Before we've finish'd our first sacrifice

Enter a Hawker with copies of new laws relating to the colony, which he has brought out with him, for sale. Like all itinerant vendors of literature he is trying to attract purchasers by reciting and bawling out select passages

Peisthetairus, in expectation of the Commissioner's return. is working himself into a proper state of wrath in order to be ready for him. Mere gratuitous complaint would not be suitable to his character from the papers in his hand. The sale of them is his only object, and he is quite unconscious that the specimen which he recites is applicable to an incident which has just occurred He enters on the opposite side with the monotonous chant of the vendor of a last dying speech, confronting Peisthetairus, who is returning after having driven out the Commissioner

Haw. 'Moreover, if a Nephelococcugian Should assault or smite an Athenian citizen'-What's this? What's all this trumpery paper here?

HAW I've brought you the new laws and ordinances,

And copies of the last decrees to sell

PEIS. (dryly and bitterly) Let's hear 'em.

HAW. 'It's enacted and ordain'd, That the Nephelococcugians shall use

Such standard weights and measures'-PEIS Friend, you'll find Hard measure here, and a heavy weight, I promise you, Upon your shoulders shortly

HAW What's the matter?

What's come to you?

PEIS Peis Get out, with your decrees! I've bloody decrees against you, dire decrees

[drives him off

Com (returning) I summon Peisthetairus to his answer.

In an action of assault and battery,

For the first day of the month Munychion

PEIS Hah! say you so? You're there again! Have at you [drives him off .

HAW (returning) 'And in case of any assault or violence.

Against the person of the Magistrate'—
PEIS Bless me! What you! You're there again. [drives him off.

Com (returning again) I'll rum you;

I'll lay my damages at ten thousand drachmas
PEIS In the meantime, I'll smash your balloting boxes

Com. Remember, how you effaced the public monument. I

On the pillar, and defiled it late last night.

Pris Pah! stuff! There, seize him, somebody

-What, you're off too

Come, let's remove, and get away from hence, And sacrifice our goat to the gods within doors.

It is to be feared that, without having it pointed out to him, the Reader will hardly be aware, that in some of the following lines an attempt is made to imitate the effect of the spondaio passages in the original

CHORUS

Henceforth-Our Worth, Our Right-Our Might. Shall be shown. Acknowledged, known, Mankind shall raise Prayers, vows, praise, To the Birds alone Our employ, is to destroy The vermin train, Ravaging amain Your fruits and grain We're the wardens Of your gardens, To watch and chase The wicked race. And out them shorter In hasty slaughter

The first lines of the Epirrbema are descriptive of the cruel madness of the times See note to page 190 Diagona was a Poet, a foreigner resident at Athens Being suspected of Atheism, and consequently of being an accomplice in the imaginary plot, he was proscribed and a price set upon his head, it seems also that in other instances which are alluded to, assassination was encouraged by public rewards.

¹ The sort of accusations which were current at the time, similar to those of the mutilation of the Hermac—Peisthetairus does not take any notice or bestow a whole line upon his accuser, the last words of the verse are addressed to the Hawker

The history of a similar period, the times of Titus Oates's plot (admirably described by Roger North in his Examen), may serve to illustrate the lines 13 and 14, the community, in both instances, remaining subject to a reign of terror under obscure wretches, whose sole instrument of dominion was perjury; as it was necessary for those Sovereign Witnesses to extort respectable subsidiary evidence in support of their main system of perjury, threats and imprisonment were the means employed in both instances, as appears by the narrative of Andocides

EPIRRHEMA.

At the present urgent crisis, all your efforts and attention

Are directed to secure Diagoras's apprehension:

Handsome bounties have been offer'd of a talent for his head,

Likewise with respect to Tyrants (Tyrants, that are gone and dead).

Bounties of a talent each, for all that can be kill'd or caught

With a zealous emulation, we, the Birds, have also thought

Just and proper to proclaim, from this time forth, that

From Philocrates, the fowler, the protection of the law: Furthermore, we fix a price for bringing him alive or dead.

Four, if he's secured alive, a single talent for his head: He, that Ortolans and Quails to market has presumed to bring.

And the Sparrows, six a penny, tied together in a string, With a wicked art retaining sundry Doves in his employ, Fasten'd, with their feet in fetters, forced to serve for a decov

Further, we declare and publish our command to men below,

All the Birds you keep in prison, to release and let them

We shall, else, revenge ourselves, and we shall teach the tyrants yet, How to chirp and dance in fetters, in the tangles of a net.

CHORUS

Blest are they,
The Birds alway,
With perfect clothing,
Fearing nothing,
Cold or sleet or summer heat.
As it chances,
As he fancies,
Each his own vagary follows,
Dwelling in the dells and hollows,
When, with eager weary strain,
The shrilly grasshoppers complain,
Parch'd upon the sultry plain
Madden'd with the raging heat,
We secure a cool retreat,
In the shady nocks and coves,
Recesses of the sacred groves,

Serves to feast, and make us merry Anterirriema.

Many a herb, and many a berry

To the judges of the prize, we wish to mention in a word The return we mean to make, if our performance is preferr'd

First, then, in your empty coffers you shall see the sterling Owl,

From the mines of Laurium, familiar as a common fewl,

Roosting among the bags and pouches each at ease upon his nest

¹ The figure of an owl stamped on the coin of Athens.

Undisturb'd, rearing and hatching little broods of interest:

If you wish to cheat in office, but are inexpert and raw, You should have a Kite for agent, capable to gripe and claw,

Cranes and Cormorants shall help you to a stomach and a throat

When you feast abroad, but if you give a vile, unfriendly vote,

Hasten and provide yourselves, each, with a little silver plate,

Like the statues of the gods, for the protection of his pate,

Else, when forth abroad you ramble on a summer holiday,

We shall take a dirty vengeance, and befoul your best array

In the following scene a foot-messenger arrives at full speed from the new city, apparently in a state of great exhaustion. He communicates his important intelligence to Peisthetairus in a single gasp of breath. 'Your fortification's finished!' The report, which he makes of the building of a new Babylon, by the nation of the Birds, as it considerably exceeds, even, that licence of assuming impossibilities, which is the privilege of the ancient comedy, may lead us to examine the mode of humorous contrivance by which the author has managed, in some degree, to maintain that balance between truth and falsehood, which I have (in another place) endeavoured to point out as essential to the character of all dramatic representations whether serious or comic.

The interest which we take in the development of moral truth, and in the illustration of human character, is so much stronger than that which we attach to mere matter-of-fact, that, where the two are combined (that is to say, where a supposed fact is made the foundation of a new and striking illustration of character), our attention is, generally speaking, wholly directed to the latter, and we are inclined to take the fact for granted; as we allow the scrawl, which a mathematician draws, to stand for a circle or a square, our whole attention being absorbed in the acquisition of a general and a permanent truth. It is, we believe, an established axiom in the art of lying, that almost anything may be made oredible of almost any person, provided that the imaginary facts are accompanied by a just representation of the behaviour of the person, such as it might he supposed to he under the alleged circumstances, and this will be more strikingly the case, if some trait of his character, not generally observed, but likely to he immediately recognized, is exhibited for the first time It has been observed elsewhere of the Aristophanic, or ancient comedy, that it is essentially a grave, humorous, impossible Great Lie, related with an accurate mimicry of the language and manners of the persons introduced. As the bumour of a Narrative Lie is more easily comprehended than that of a dramatic one, we may venture to examine the drama, such as it would have appeared if it bad been helped out, in some degree, hy a narrative comment, if, like the explanatory heroio prologue in Henry the Fifth, the ancient comedy had made use of a bnffoonish prologue, explanatory and preparatory to the different scenes We might snppose Aristophanes or his prolocutor on this occasion to have said—' Gentlemen, the information which I apprehend you will shortly receive of the progress of the new buildings at Nephelocoocugia, may perhaps strike you as extraordinary I should not be surprised if to some amongst you it should appear little short of being absolutely incredible, but I would not have you rely entirely npon your own judgement. There is Peisthetairus, who has every means of information, and of whose abilities you can have no doubt you will see him as much astonished as any amongst yon, and you will see him so for the first and only time But will he disbelieve the fact? Far from it. Like the indicious amongst yourselves, he will not entertain the least doubt of it, on the contrary, unless I am very much mistaken in his character, you will be able to detect evident symptoms of jealousy and uneasmess at the idea of such an object baving been accomplished independently of his direction and superintendence, and, indeed, not without reason, for you will see that both the oborus and the messenger himself appear to abate something of their accustomed respect and deference to him You will Observe, likewise, that the messenger is far from anticipating the slightest incredulity as to the general fact of the completion of the work, of which he himself has been a witness; while he is apparently very anxious in his negative testimony as to the total absence of any extrancous aid or assistance whatever.'

PEISTHETAIRUS.

Well, Friends and Birds, the sacrifice has succeeded; Our omens have been good ones, good and fair But what's the meaning of it? We've no news From the new building yet! No messenger! Oh! there at last, I see,—There's somebody Running at speed, and panting like a racer.

[Enter a messenger, quite out of breath, and speaking in short snatches

Where is he? Where? Where is he? MESS Where? Where is he?-

The president, Peisthetairus?

Here am I PEIS (coolly)

MESS (in a gasp of breath) Your fortification's finish'd

Well! that's well. Pers

Mess A most amazing, astonishing work it is! So that Theagenes and Proxemides 1

Might flourish, and gasconade, and prance away, Quite at their ease, both of them four-in-hand, Driving abreast upon the breadth of the wall,

Each in his own chariot

You surprise me PEIS

MESS And the height (for I made the measurement myself)

Is exactly a hundred fathom

Heaven and earth! How could it be? Such a mass! Who could have built

1t. ? MESS The Birds, no creature else—no foreigners, Egyptian bricklayers, workmen or masons, But they themselves, alone, by their own efforts

¹ Pretenders to great wealth and affecting extraordinary expense and display —See note 3 to p 210
² Egyptian labourers are mentioned in the Frogs

(Even to my surprise, as an eye witness)— The Birds, I say, completed everything

There came a body of thirty thousand Cranes (I won't be positive, there might be more) With stones from Africa, in their craws and gizzards, Which the Stone curlews and Stone-chatterers Work'd into shape and finish'd. The Sand Martins, And Mud larks, too, were busy in their department, Mixing the mortar, while the Water Birds, As fast as it was wanted, brought the water To temper, and work it.

Pers (in a fidget) But who served the masons?

Who did you get to carry it?

MESS To carry it?

Of course, the Carrion Crows and Carrying Pigeons.
PEIS (in a fuss, which he endeavours to conceal) Yes! yes! But after all, to load your hods-

How did you manage that?

Mrss Oh, capitally
I promise you —There were the Geese, all barefoot,
Trampling the mortar, and, when all was ready
They handed it into the hods so eleverly, With thoir flat feet !

Pris (A bad joke, as a vent for irritation) They footed it, you mean—Come, it was handly done though, I confess Mrss Indeed, I assure you, it was a sight to see them , And trains of Ducks there were, clambering the ladders, With their duck legs, like bricklayers 'prentices, All dapper and linds, with their little trowels.

Prist In fact, then, it is no use engaging foreigners.

Mere folly and waste we've all within ourselves.

Ah well now come! But about the woodwork? Heli!

1 Like Falstaff, when he is annoved and perplexed joking per force TPeisthetainus is at a loss unable to think of a new objection he insintains his importance by a nice observation - 4s 2000 as an objection occurs he states it with great eagerness, but with no better success than I elera.

Who were the carpenters? Answer me that! MESS. The Woodpeckers, of course: and there they were.

Labouring upon the gates, driving and banging, With their hard hatchet beaks, and such a din, Such a clatter as they made, hammering and hacking,

In a perpetual peal, pelting away

Like shipwrights hard at work in the arsenal. And now their work is finish'd, gates and all, Staples and bolts, and bars and everything; The sentries at their posts, patrols appointed; The watchmen in the barbican; the beacons Ready prepared for lighting; all their signals Arranged—But I'll step out, just for a moment, To wash my hands — You'll settle all the rest [Exit.

> [Peisthetairus, surprised at the rapid conclusion of the work, feeling from the volubility and easy manner of the messenger the blow which his authority has received, seeing that nothing 18 left for him to superintend, nothing to direct, nothing to suggest, or to find fault with, remains in an attitude of perplexity and astonishment, with his hands clasped across his forehead

CHORUS (to PEISTHETAIBUS, in a sort of self-satisfied, drawling tone)

Heighday! Why, what's the matter with ye? Sure! Ah! well now, I calculate, you're quite astonish'd; You did not know the nature of our birds: I guess you thought it an impossible thing To finish up your fortification job Within the time so cleverly.

PEIS (recovering himself and looking round.) Yes, truly.

Yes, I'm surprised, indeed, I must confess— I could almost imagine to myself It was a dream, an illusion altogether--But there's the watchman of the town, I see! In alarm and haste, it seems! He's running here-[The watchman enters, with a shout of alarm.

-Well, what's the matter?

w A most dreadful business I One of the gods just now—Jupiter's gods— Has bolted through the gates, and driven on Right into the atmosphere, in spite of us, And all the Jackdaws, that were mounting guard.

PEIS (animated at the prospect of having something to manage.)

What an outrage! What an insult! Which of 'em? Which of the gods?

We can't pretend to say, We just could ascertain that he wore wings. We're clear upon that point.

Pers But a light party Ought surely to have been sent in such a case,

A detachment-

A detachment has been sent Already a squadron of ten thousand Hawks, Besides a corps of twenty thousand Hobby hawks, As a light cavalry, to scour the country Vultures and Falcons, Ospreys, Eagles, all Have sallied forth, the sound of wings is heard. Rushing and whizzing round on every side, In eager search -The fugitive divinity Is not far off, and soon must be discovered.

PEIS Did nobody think of slingers? Where are they?

Where are the slingers got to? Give me a sling Arrows and slings, I say!—Make haste with 'em'

CHORUS

The verses which follow belong to a species of songs, which are alluded to in Aristophanes more than once. They may properly be called "Watch-Songa", being sung

Peisthetairus is exposed to a fresh mortification, the orders which he was ready to give had been anticipated! He contrives, however, to detect an omission, and, upon the strength of it, to assume a tone of authority and command by the Watchmen and Soldiers on guard, to keep themselves and their comrades awake and alert

War is at hand,
On air and land,
Proclaim'd and fix'd.
War and strife,
Eager and rife,
Are kindled atwixt
This state of ours,
And the heavenly powers
Look with care
To the circuit of air,
Watch lest he,
The deity,
Whatever he be,
Should unaware
Escape and flee

But hark! The rushing sound of hasty wings Approaches us The deity is at hand.

PEIS Holloh, you! Where are ye flying? Where are ye going?

Hold! Halt! Stop there, I tell ye!—Stop this instant! What are ye? Where do you come from? Speak, explain

IRIS Me? From the gods, to be sure! the Olympian gods

PEIS (pointing to the flaunting appendages of her dress) 1 What are ye? with all your flying trumpery!

A helmet, or a galley? What's your name?

IRIS Iris, the messenger of the gods

PEIS A messenger!

Oh, you're a naval messenger, I reckon, The Salaminian galley, or the Paralian?

¹ Iris, the rainbow personified, is of course attired in all the colours of the rainbow, with abundance of lappets and streamers ² The two sacred galleys of the Athenians—The most splendidly equipped were dispatched upon the most important occasions—See note 2, p 178

-You're in full sail, I see IRIS What's here to do? Pers Are there no hirds in waiting? Nobody To take her into custody?

IRIS Me, to custody?

Why, what's all this?

You'll find to your cost, I promise ye IRIS Well, this seems quite unaccountable! Peis Which of the gates Did ye enter at, ye jade? How came you here?

IRIS Gates !- I know nothing about your gates. not I

PEIS Fine innocent ignorant airs she gives herself! You applied to the Pehcans, I suppose?—The captain Of the Cormorants on guard admitted you? IRIS Why, what the plague! what's this?

PEIS So. you confess! -You came without permission!

Are you mad? PEIS Did neither the sitting magistrates nor bird masters Examine and pass you?

Examine me, forsooth! IRIS This is the way then !- without thanks or Pers leave

You ramble and fly, committing trespasses In an atmosphere belonging to your neighbours! IRIS And where would you have us fly then? Us.

the gods!

I neither know nor care -But I know this-They sha'n't fly here—And another thing I know I know—that, if there ever was an instance Of an Iris or a rainbow, such as you,

Detected in the fact, fairly condemn'd, And justly put to death, it would be you

IRIS But I'm immortal

Pris (coolly and peremptorily) That would make no difference,

We should be strangely circumstanced indeed. With the possession of a Sovereign Power

And you, the gods, in no subordination, No kind of order, fairly mutinying, Infringing and disputing our commands.

-Now then, you'll please to tell me where you're going?

Which way you're steering with those wings of yours? IRIS (in a great fright, hesitating and hurried, but attempting to assume a tone of authority)

I'm commission'd from my father Jove To summon human mortals to perform Their rites and offerings and oblations, due To the powers above

Pers. And who do you mean? what powers? IRIS. What powers? Ourselves, the Olympian deities!

Peis So then, you're deities, the rest of ye! IRIS Yes, to be sure What others should there be? PEIS Remember—once for all—that we, the Birds, Are the only deities from this time forth,

And not your father Jove By Jove! not he! Oh, rash, presumptuous wretch! Incense no

The wrath of the angry gods, lest Rum drive 1 Her ploughshare o'er thy mansion; and Destruction, With hasty besom sweep thee to the dust; Or flaming Lightning smite thee with a flash, Left in an instant smouldering and extinct

PEIS Do ye hear her?—Quite in tragedy!—quite sublime!

Come, let me try for a bouncer in return Let's see —Let's recollect 2_' Me dost thou deem, Like a base Lydian or a Phrygian slave, With hyperbolical bombast to scare?'

I tell ye, and you may tell him-Jupiter-If he provokes me, and pushes things too far-Will see some eagles of mine, to outnumber his,

 A medley from terrific passages in the tragic poets
 Peisthetairus at last hits upon a tragic passage which he thinks will serve for a suitable reply

A vulgar line which disfigures a very fine scene of Euripides

With firebrands in their claws, about his house And I shall send a flight of my Porphyrions, A hundred covey or more, arm'd cap a-pie, To assault him in his sublime celestial towers Perhaps he may remember, in old times He found enough to do with one Porphyrion.

He found enough to do with one Porphyrion.

And for you, Madam Iris, I shall strip
Your rainbow-shanks, if you're impertment,
Depend upon it, and I myself, in person,
Will punish you, myself—old as I am

IBIS Curse ye, you wretch, and all your filthy words PEIS Come, souttle away, convoy your person else

Be been

Be brisk, and leave a vacancy Brush off
IRIS I shall inform my father —He shall know
Your rudeness and impertmence He shall,— He'll settle ye and keep ye m order —You shall see PEIS Oh dear! is it come to that? No, you're mistaken, Young woman, upon that point, I'm not your man, I'm an old fellow grown, I'm thunder-proof, Proof against flames and darts and female arts You'd best look out for a younger customer

Poor Iris, in her rage unwittingly makes use of the same sort of phrase with which a young girl at Athens would repel, or affect to repel, improper familianties Poisthetairus, taking advantage of this, pretends to consider her indignation as a mere coquettish artifice intended to inveigle and allure him

The Athenian Father—'I shall inform my father'— may be considered as equivalent to the Irish Brother—
The menace in one case would imply a duel, in the other a lawsuit

Спокиз

Notice is hereby given
To the deities of heaven,
Not to trespass here,
Upon our atmosphere.

¹ The Greek name for a flamingo, also the name of one of the giants who made war against the gods

Take notice, from the present day No smoke or incense is allow'd To pass this way.

Quite strange it is! quite unaccountable! That herald to mankind that was dispatch'd, What has become of him? He's not yet return'd

Enter HERALD.

HERALD Oh, Peisthetairus, happiest, wisest, best, Cleverest of men! Oh, most illustrious! Oh, most mordinately fortunate! Oh, most __ Oh, do, for shame, do bid me have done

PEIS What are you saying?

All the people of Earth HER Have join'd in a complimentary vote, decreeing A crown of gold to you, for your exertions PEIS I'm much obliged to the people of Earth But why?

What was their motive?

Oh, most noble founder Of this supereminent, celestial city, You can't conceive the clamour of applause, The enthusiastic popularity. That attends upon your name, th' impulse and stir That moves among mankind, to colonize And migrate hither In the time before, There was a Spartan mania, and people went Stalking about the streets with Spartan staves, With their long hair, unwash'd and slovenly, Lake so many Socrateses, but, of late, Birds are the fashion-Birds are all in all-Their modes of life are grown to be mere copies Of the birds' habits, rising with the Lark, Scratching and scrabbling suits and informations, Picking and pecking upon points of law, Brooding and hatching evidence, -in short, It has grown to such a pitch, that names of Birds Are given to individuals, Chaerophon Is call'd an Owl, Theagenes a Goose,

Philodes a Cock Sparrow, Midias A Dunghill Cook -And all the songs in vogue Have something about Birds, Swallows or Doves,

Or about flying, or a wish for wings
Such is the state of things, and I must warn you, That you may expect to see some thousands of them

Arriving here, almost immediately,

With a clamorous demand for wings and claws I advise you to provide yourself in time PEIS Come, it won't do then, to stand dawdling here,

Go you, fill the hampers and the baskets there With wings, and bid the loutish porter bring them, While I stop here, to encounter the new-comers

It has been already observed in reference to the Chorus of the Acharnae (p 59), that when his Choruses have ceased to contribute to the progressive action of the Drama, the Poet has sometimes relieved himself from the embarrassment which they oreated, by turning into ridicule the essential character and attributes of the

In that Comedy, as in the present, the hostility of the Chorus had given spirit and animation to some of the carber scenes, but, from the moment when their hostility ceased, they had remained a mere superfluous appendage nothing being left for them to be done, and scarcely anything to be said, they could barely contrive to make their existence manifest from time to time by interposing with the expression of their acquiescence and approbation. The Poet then, having no further use for them, amuses his audience at their expense The character of Choruses (except when they happen to be in a violent passion) being habitnally obsequious and conformable, their obsequiousness is represented as connected with the display of Dicacopolis's good ebeer, the sight of which confirms their favourable opinion of his political principles, and induces them to pass over his selfish treatment of the poor country man with an apologetical observation

But with respect to the Chorus now before us (that of the Birds) there is another point of the choral character (arising out of the very condition of their existence as a Chorus] which must not be overlooked. All Choruses are essentially poetic and imaginative, the votaries of ideal harmony and beauty. Under this point of view, the following passage places them in amusing contrast with the practical active bustling spirit of Peisthetairus The Chorus begin chanting their namby-pamby anticipations of future splendour and happiness, Peisthetairus, in the first instance, favouring them with a sort of gruff acquiescence But, as they proceed, he loses all patience, contriving however to relieve himself, and give a vent to his ill-humour, by scolding the servant The obsequious character of the Chorus now displays itself; they affect to sympathize with his impatience; expressing their own displeasure in a style suited to their choral character, that 18 to say, pedantic and formal. Peisthetairus, utterly disgusted with them, evades their sympathy by relapsing into comparative good-humour. The Chorus then betake themselves to their usual practice of exhorting and advising —This is more than he can endure—instead of taking any notice of them, he flies into a pretended rage against his servant; and is running off the stage to beat him, when he is encountered by the first specimen of the new colonists

This explanation must not be regarded as fanciful or superfluous. We should in that case be compelled to adopt a conclusion, in which the admirers of Aristophanes would not readily acquiesce, namely, that the Poet had (in a play already of unusual length) inserted a passage of twenty-four lines destitute of poetical merit, without any comic intention and wholly unamusing as a dramatic exhibition.

Peisthetairus says little in the following scene, but is not the less amusing from his restless fidget and illdisguised impatience and disgust

CHORUS

Shortly shall the noble town,
Populous and gay,
Shine in honour and renown
PEIS (dryly.) Why, perhaps she may.
CHORUS The benignant powers of love,

From their happy sphere,
From the blest abodes above—
PEIS (venting his ill humour on the servant)
Curse ye, rascal! can't ye move?

CHORUS —Are descending here,

Where m all this earthly range, He that wishes for a change, Can he find a seat,

Joyous and secure as this, Fill'd with happiness and bliss,

Such a fair retreat?
Here are all the lovely

Here are all the lovely faces, Gentle Venus and the Graces, And the little Cupid,

Order, ease and harmony,

Peace and affability Peace and affability

The scoundrel is so stupid,
Quicker, sirrah! bring it quicker!

CHORUS Let him bring the woven wicker
With the winged store.

I myself, in very deed,
With the varlet will proceed,
And smite him more and more,
Like a sluggish as he seems,
Or even as a man that dreams,

Therefore smite him sore.²
Pers (determined to cross them, relapses into good humour)

He's a lazy rogue, it's true
CHORUS Now range them forth, display'd in order due.

Feathers of every form and size and hue, With shrewd intent adapting every pinion To the new residents of your dominion³

The Chorus in their idealizing and poetical character Chorus in their obsequious character, but with a formal pedantic tone.

³ The Chorus assume their admonitory character Peisthetairus can bear it no longer, he brenks from them, and runs off the stage, as if to beat the servant.

PEIS. I vow by the Hawks and Eagles, I won't bear it.

I'll beat ye, I will myself, you lazy rascal!

As a practical comment upon the anticipations of the Chorus, and as a sample of the kind of population likely to resort to a new colony, the first arrival is that of a young reprobate, who wishes his father out of the way, and who conceives that the laws of the Birds will permit him to hasten that desirable conclusion Peisthetairus receives and attends to him, without being betrayed into any expression of moral indignation, which would be inconsistent with his character, as a perfect politician merely states, as a matter of fact, some difficulties arising out of a point of law, professes a wish to serve him, as a hearty partisan well disposed to the cause of the new colony; and finally, in an easy way, recalls to his recollection one of the precepts of his Catechism; and, at the same time, points out to him a mode of life suited to his situation and tastes The young man, who is more of a wild desperate than a confirmed villain, is struck with the suggestion, expresses a resolution to adopt it, and departs

Enter a fellow (singing)

'Oh ' for an Eagle's force and might,1 Loftily to soar Over land and sea, to light On a lonely shore'

Well, here's a song that's something to the Pers

Y Man Aye, aye, there's nothing like it—wings and flying !

Wings are your only sort. I'm a bird-fancier In the new fashion quite. I've taken a notion To settle and live amongst ye. I like your laws PEIS (very gravely and methodically) What laws do you mean? We've many laws amongst us

1 From a Chorus of Sophocles, dramatic poetry and music was popular, like opera airs on the continent See Knights, p 20

Y MAN Your laws in general, but particularly The law that allows of beating one's own father PEIS Why truly, Yes! we esteem it a point of valour

In a Chicken, if he clapperclaws the old Cock Y MAN That was my view, feeling a wish in fact To throttle mine, and seize the property

PEIS (with great candour and composure, simply stating a fact.) Yes, but you'd find some difficulties here, An obstacle insurmountable, I conceive, An ancient statute standing unrepeal'd, Engraved upon our old Ciconian columns It says that when a Stork or a Ciconia Has brought his lawful progeny of young Storks To bird's estate, and enabled them to fly, The sire shall stand entitled to a maintenance, At the son's cost and charge, in his old age.

Y MAN (with a start of disappointment, slapping his forehead)

I've managed finely, it seems, to mend myself! Forced to maintain my father after all!
PEIS (in a soothing consolatory tone.) No, no, not quite so bad, since you're come here,

As a well wisher to the establishment, Zealous and friendly, we'll contrive to equip you With a suit of armour, as a soldier's orphan ' And now, young man, let me suggest some notions. Things that were taught me when a boy 'Your father?'

'Strike him not i' rather take this pair of wings, And this cockspur (giving him a sword), imagine you've a coxcomb

The sons of citizens slain were publicly presented with a suit of armour

A want of harmony in the original verse appears to indicate the insertion of a formula—but again, if we resolve this formula into its two component parts, the Question and Answer, with or consequent pause between them, the harmony of the verse is very sensibly improved. The formula was part of a series of moral probibitions taught to children by Question and Answer

Upon your head, to serve you for a helmet;
Look out for service, and enlist yourself;
Get into a garrison; live upon your pay;
And let your father live You're fond of fighting,
And fond of flying—take a flight to Thrace,
There you may please yourself, and fight your fill Y Man By Jove, you're right The notion's not a bad one, I'll follow it up!

PEIS (very gravely and quietly.) You'll find it the best way.

[Exit Y. MAN

Kinesias, a lame dithyrambic poet and musician, arrives in the hopes of being able to provide himself with wings, which will enable him to look after his concerns among the clouds, the great emporium for business with all persons who are embarked in the dithyrambic line. Peisthetairus amuses himself with affronting and laughing at him, but he persists in his purpose, and professes his determination to continue worrying and persevering till it is accomplished.

The reader who refers to the original will perceive that the interruptions with which Peisthetairus breaks in upon Kinesias's recitation or song are omitted in the translation To the Athenian audience, the original must have been familiar, and probably sufficiently hackneyed, to make them feel amusement at hearing it accompanied with burlesque interruptions, but as only one other fragment of dithyrambic poetry has been preserved to modern times, and neither of them has appeared in our language, it seemed more advisable to present it to the English reader in an unbroken form.

Enter KINESIAS, singing.

Fearless, I direct my flight To the vast Olympian height; Thence at random I repair, Wafted in the whirling air, With an eddy, wild and strong, Over all the fields of song

¹ It is singular that this other fragment presents the image of flying

PEIS Ah! well, Kinesias, I'm quite glad to see ye, But what has brought ye and all your songs and music, Hobbling along with your old chromatic joints? Kin (singing) 'Let me live, and let me sing,

Like a bird upon the wing' Pris No more of that, but tell us plainly, in prose, What are yo come for? what's your scheme, your Object?

Kin. I was anxious to procure a pair of wings, To say the truth, wishing to make a tour Among the clouds, collecting images,

And metaphors, and things of that description

PEIS How so! do you procure 'em from the clouds?
KIN Entirely! Our dithyrambic business absolutely Depends upon them, our most approved commodities, The dusky, misty, murky articles, With the suitable wings and feathers, are imported Exclusively from thence I'll give you a sample, A thing of my own composing You shall judge.

PEIS But, indeed, I'd rather not

But, indeed, you must, It's a summary view of flying, comprehending it In all its parts, in every point of view

KINESIAS (singing)

Ye gentle feather'd tribes, Of every plume and hue, That, in uninhabited air, Are hurrying here and there, Oh! that I, like you, Could leave this earthly level. For a wild aerial revel. O'er the waste of ocean To wander and to dally With the billow's motion. Or, m an eager sally, Soaring to the sky, To range and rove on high With my plumy sails, R 2

Buffeted and baffled with the gusty gales, Buffeted and baffled . .

[While Kinesias is repeating these last lines Peisthetairus comes behind him and gives him a flap with a huge pair of wings.

KIN. A pretty, civil joke indeed!

Pers What joke?

I'm only buffeting you with the plumy sails, I thought it was what you wanted

Kin Well, that's fine!

Pretty respect for a master such as me, A leader of the band, that all the tribes Are ready to fight for, to bespeak him first

Are ready to fight for, to be peak him first.

PEIS Well, we've a little unfledged chorus here,
That Leotrophides 1 hatch'd, poor puny nestlings,

I'll give 'em you for scholars

Kin Ah, laugh on!
Laugh on! but take my word for it, here I stay,
Till you provide me with a pair of wings,
Proper to circumnavigate the skies [Exit Kin]

Peisthetairus is represented in the following scene as a perfect master of his art, amusing himself in angling and playing with a stupid, impudent young scoundrel, sometimes twitching him in with a slight jerk of his hook, and again allowing him to run out to the full length of his line If any one passage were to be selected from the remains of Aristophanes as particularly illustrative of the manner in which he delights to exhibit character, perhaps it would be this, it is not a serious struggle for ascendancy, such as he displays elsewhere, in this instance he shows Peisthetairus, as a consummate practitioner, relinquishing and re-assuming it at pleasure But this is one of those scenes which, to be thoroughly appreciated, would require to be developed in dramatic action by a superior comedian. The mere printed page, unless we suppose the reader to bestow as much attention on it as an actor would do in studying his part, will be found to convey a very confused and inadequate notion of it

¹ Kinesias was ridiculed for his slight filmsy figure, adapted for flying! Leotrophides, the Scholiast tells us, resembled him in this respect.

The song, with which the Sycophant enters, is said, by the Scholiast, to be from Alcaous, it should seem more consonant to his character to suppose it to be some modern parody or adaptation from one of the comedies of the time

Enter SYCOPHANT, singing

Tell us who the strangers are, Gentle Swallow Birds of air, Party-colour'd, poor and bare, Tell us who the strangers are Gentle Swallow, tell me true

Pris Here's a fine plague broke out! See yonder fellow

Sauntering along this way, swaggering and singing Syc Hoh! gentle Swallow! I say, my gentle Swallow.

My gentle Swallow! How often must I call?

PEIS Why, there it is, the produgal in the fable Seeking for Swallows in a ragged coat.

Syc (in an arrogant, overbearing tone.) Who's he that's set to serve out wings? Where is he? Pris 'Tis I, but what do you want? You should explain

Syc Wings! Wings! You need not have ask'd me

Wings I want.

PEIS Do you mean to fly for flannel to Pellene? Syo. (a little disconcerted at this allusion to his attire.)
No, no! But I'm employ'd I employ myself,
In fact, among the allies and islanders,

I'm in the informing line.

PEIS (in a tone of very grave irony, which the Sycophant not perceiving, he proceeds more fluently than before)

I wish you joy
Syc. And a mover and manager for prosecutions
In criminal suits and so forth, you understand mo,

An expression of impatience in the original has been hitherto mustranslated

2 Pellene was famous for woollen stuff. Pieces of it were given as prizes at their public games

So I wish to equip myself with a pair of wings, To whisk about and trounce the islanders

PEIS. Would it be doing things in better form

To serve a summons flying, think ye?

Syo (not knowing very well what to make of him) No, Not that, but just to avoid the risk of pirates, To return in company with a flight of cranes (As they do with the gravel in their gizzards), With a belly-full of lawsuits for my ballast

Peis (in a grave, primitive, and somewhat twaddling tone, intended to re-animate the impertinence of the Sycophant)

So this is your employment! A young man Like you to be an informer! Is it possible?

Syc Why shouldn't it? I was never bred to labour. PEIS (as before) But sure, there are other lawful occupations,

In which a brisk young fellow, such as you, Might earn an honest, decent livelihood, In credit and good-will, without informing

Syc (thoroughly taken in, and thinking he has to deal with a mere silly, well-meaning old man, becomes emphatically insolent)

Wings, my good fellow, wings-I want not words! Peis (dryly) I'm giving you wings, already Syc (a little puzzled and taken aback)

What, with words?

Is that your way?

PEIS (in a tone of very grave banter)

Yes, for mankind in general Are wing'd, as it were, and brought to plume them-

In different ways, by speeches and discourse

SYC (confused and puzzled) What, all?

PEIS (as before) Yes, all. I'll give you a striking

You must have heard, yourself, elderly people

Sitting conversing in the barber's shop
And one says—'Well, Dutrephes has talk'd
So much to my young man, he has brought him at last

 $\overset{\mathbf{To}}{\sim}$ plume himself in driving' And another Says that his son is quite amongst the clouds, Grown flighty of late with studying tragedy Syc. (with a sort of hesitating laugh)

So words are wings, you say

PEIS No doubt of it. I say it, and I repeat it, human nature Is marvellously raised and elevated By words I was in hopes that I might raise you, By words of good advice, to another sphere, To live in an honest calling

Syc (feeling himself bantered and beaten, but restive But I won't, though. and angry) PEIS (coolly) Why, what will you do?

Syc (sulkily at first, but animating as he proceeds)
Why, I won't disgrace my family

My father, and my grandfather before him, Served as informers, and I'll stick to it, The profession —So you'll please to hand 'em me out, A pair of your best wings, Vultitres or Hawks, To fly to the Islands, with my summonses, And home again to record them in the courts,

And out again, to the Islands
Peis (in a tone of interest and sympathy, as if he was himself an amaleur desirous of displaying his professional knowledge.)

Yes, that 's well, I understand ye, I think, your method is,
To be beforehand with 'em? Your defendant, You get him cast for non appearance, heh!

Before he can arrive, and finish him In his absence, heh?

Syc. (completely taken in, delighted, rubbing his hands) By Jove, you're up to it! Peis Then, whilst he's sailing here you get the start. And fly, to pounce upon the property, To rummage out the chattels

That's the trick, The notion of it!-I see you're up to it.-A man must whisk about, here and away,

Just like a whipping-top.

PEIS

Aye, yes, you're right;
I understand you. The instance is a good one—
A whipping-top, you say. Well, by good luck,
I've here a capital, slashing suit of wings
To serve ye, made of a cow-hide from Corcyra

Syc Oh, heaven! what's there? a horsewhip? Pers. Wings, I tell ye,

To whisk ye about, to flog ye, and make ye fly.

Syc. Oh dear! oh dear!

PEIS Scamper away, you scoundrel! Vanish, you vagabond! whisk yourself off! I'll pay ye for your practices in the courts, Your pettifoggicorascalities [Exit Syc. (To the attendants)

Come, bundle up the wings; let's take 'em back. [Exeun

Fabulous notions respecting the unknown portions of the world seem to have been nearly the same (or at least of the same character) in the time of Aristophanes as in the days of Sir John Mandeville.

The marvels of these regions, known only to the Birds, are naturally expatiated upon by a Chorus of Birds when released from the business of the stage and placed in immediate communication with the audience. But it will be seen that, by a strange coincidence, those wonderful and remote objects have an unaccountable analogy to things and persons at Athens, as in the following instance of the enormous tree, which, by the botanists, was considered as belonging to the Sycophantic genus, but which was vulgarly called a Cleonymus, whereas at Athens there happened to be a person precisely of the same name, 'Cleonymus', equally distinguished for his size, and having the same peculiarity of being classed among the Sycophants And what is more singular, as the Athenian Cleonymus had lost his shield in battle, it so happened that his vegetable counterpart was a deciduous tree, with leaves of a scutiform or shield-like shape, which it was also in the habit of losing

The antistrophe is a romantic and mysterious description of a junketing public-house which seems to have been in vogue, but from which it was not safe to return to town after dusk. Orestes, an heroic name, was also the name, or the nickname, of a noted robber (see the Acharmans, p 68) It was reckoned extremely dangerous to meet a demigod after sunset

CHORUS STROPHE.

We have flown and we have run, Viewing marvels many a one, In every land beneath the sun. But the strangest sight to see Was a huge exotic tree, Growing, without heart or pith, Weak and sappy, like a withe, But with leaves and boughs withal, Comely, flourishing, and tall. This the learned all ascribe To the Sycophantic tribe, But the natives there, like us, Call it a Cleonymus In the springs' delightful hours It blossoms with rhetoric flowers. I saw it standing in the field, With leaves in figure like a shield. On the first tempestuous day I saw it cast those leaves away

ANTISTROPHE

There hes a region out of sight, Far within the realm of night, Far within the realm of night, Far from torch and candle light. There in feasts of meal and wine Men and demigods may join, There they banquet and they dine, Whilst the light of day prevails, At sunset their assurance fails. If any mortal then presumes, Orestes, sallying from the tombs,

Like a fierce heroic sprite, Assaults and strips the lonely wight.

The scene which follows may be considered as a short abstract of the mode in which clandestine political information is received, attended to, and dismissed The informant presents himself with an extraordinary display of precaution and apprehension; he is received with eagerness and cordiality; attended to with great earnestness. interrupted only by some little ill-humour on the part of the man of business, when, in seeking for information, he is obliged to betray the want of it, finally he is dismissed with a sort of indifference approaching to derision, after having been thoroughly pumped and drained of his intelligence

PROMETHEUS, PEISTHETAIRUS, CHORUS

Pro (enters muffled up, peeping about him with a look of anxiety and suspicion)

Oh, dear! if Jupiter should chance to see me!

Where's Peisthetairus? Where?

Why, what's all this? PEIS

This fellow muffled up?

Pro. Do look behind me;

Is anybody watching? any gods Following and spying after me?

Pers No, none; None that I see: there's nobody—But you!

What are ye?

Tell me, what's the time of day?
Why, noon; past noon, but tell me, who Pro PEIS are ye? Speak.

Much past? How much? Pro.

Confound the fool, I say! (aside.) PEIS

The insufferable blockhead!

How's the sky? Pro Open or overcast? Are there any clouds?

PEIS (aloud and angrily) Be hang'd !

Then I'll disguise myself no longer. Pro

My dear Prometheus!

Hold your tongue, I beg; Pro

Don't mention my name! If Jupiter should see me Or overhear ye, I'm ruin'd and undone

But now, to give you a full complete account Of everything that's passing there in Heaven— The present state of things But first, I'll trouble you To take the umbrella, and hold it overhead, Lest they should overlook us

What a thought! Just like yourself! A true Promethean thought! Stand under it, here! Speak boldly, never fear

Pro D'ye mind me?

PEIS Yes, I mind ye, speak away

PRO (emphatically) Jupiter's ruined!

PEI8 Rum'd! How? Since when? PRO From the first hour you fortified and planted Your atmospheric settlements Ever since,

There's not a mortal offers anything

In the shape of sacrifice.—No smoke of victims! No fumes of incense! Absolutely nothing! We're keeping a strict fast—fasting perforce, From day to day—the whole community

And the mland barbarous gods in the upper country Are broken out, quite mutmous and savage,
With hunger and anger, threatening to come down
With all their force, if Jupiter refuses
To open the ports and allow them a free traffic

For their entrails and intestines, as before

PEIS. (a little annoyed at being obliged to ask the question.)

What, are there other barbarous gods, besides,

In the upper country?

 P_{R0} Barbarous ?-To be sure !

They're all of Execestides's kindred 1

Peis (as before, hesitating, but with a sort of affected ease.) Well but the name now These same barbarous deities

What name do you call 'em?

 $^{^1}$ Noted elsewhere in this play as having no just claim to the rights of a citizen —See p $\,172$ and p $\,207$

PRO. (surprised at Persthetairus's ignorance) Call them! The Triballi!

PEIS (giving vent to his irritation by a forced joke) Ah! well, then, that accounts for our old saying-

Confound the Tribe of them!

Pro. (annoyed and dryly) Precisely so But now to business Thus much I can tell ye-That envoys will arrive immediately From Jupiter and those upland wild Triballi, To treat for a peace But you must not consent To ratify or conclude, till Jupiter Acknowledges the sovereignty of the Birds, Surrendering up to you the Sovereign Queen, Whom you must marry

Why, what Queen is that? Pers PRO. What Queen ?—A most delightful, charming

gırl-

Jove's housekeeper, that manages his matters, Serves out his thunderbolts, arranges everything; The constitutional laws and liberties, Morals and manners, the marine department, Freedom of speech, and threepence for the juries

PEIS Why, that seems all in all Yes everything, P_{RO}

I tell ye, in having her, you've everything, I came down hastily to say thus much,

I'm hearty, ye know; I stick to principle Steady to the human interest—always was 1

PEIS Yes, we're obliged to you for our roast victuals. PRO. And I hate these present gods, you know, most thoroughly.

I need not tell you that.
PEIS (with a sort of half sneer) No, no, you need not,2 You're known of old for an enemy to the gods

Prometheus had incurred the wrath of Jupiter by his kindness to mankind in having bestowed on them the gift of fire Peisthetairus, who has learnt all that he wanted to know, does not care to lose his time in listening to professions of zeal and attachment. He contrives, however, to conclude civilly, with a piece of obliging attention

Pro Yes, yes, like Timon, I'm a perfect Timon, Just such another But I must be going, Give me the umbrella, if Jupiter should see me,

He'll think that I'm attending a procession 1
PEIS That's well, but don't forget the folding chair,
For a part of your disguise Here, take it with your

Under the same form of a description of the wonders of the Terra Incognita we have here again one of those pieces of personal satire peculiar to the ancient comedy. It is directed against Socrates and his school, including by name his friend Chaerephon

The uncleanly habits imputed to them ('Where baths and washing are forbidden') will have been seen already alluded to in p 236 ('unwash'd and slovenly like so many Scorateses')—But it is difficult to conceive what is the imputation conveyed or alluded to by describing them as eugaged in the evocation of spirits

It is a question which might form a curious subject of inquiry for those who have the means of prosecuting it, and who are better acquainted with the history of the

Sceratic school

Pisander seems to have been an object of the Poet's peculiar aversion, in his first political comedy, the Babycontains, he had been mentioned in company with two others, as having given occasion to the origin of the war. by their extortion of compulsory presents from the subject states, an accusation which is repeated in the Lyssstrata, I 490, again in the Peace, I 396, his military pomp and arrogance are mentioned as objects of extreme disgust and contempt and it seems that he must have been the Commander described at length in the Epirrhema of the same comedy, most splendidly caparisoned and foremost in running away He had also been stigmatized by Eupolis as having been guilty of cowardly conduct.

It seems that he is brought in here, by the by, not as a

The Cancephoroi were followed by a person bearing an umbrella and a folding chair

^{2 &#}x27;Two'-For, by putting the participle in the dual, and transposing the verb and the proper name the true metre of the fragment (the long Anapaest) may be restored follower or disciple of Socrates, but in allusion to his want of military courage, as a person whose spirit wanted to be raised, and who therefore naturally resorted to a place where spirits were raised

Chaerephon was the most zealous admirer of Socrates; he is recorded to have been a person of most singular aspect

CHORUS

Beyond the navigable seas, Amongst the fierce Antipodes, There hes a lake, obscure and holy, Lazy, deep and melancholy, Solitary, secret, hidden, Where baths and washing are forbidden. Socrates, beside the brink. Summons from the murky sink Many a disembodied ghost, And Pisander reach'd the coast To raise the spirit that he lost; With a victim strange and new, A gawky Camel which he slew,1 Like Ulysses-Whereupon The grizzly sprite of Cheerephon Flitted round him, and appear'd With his eyebrows and his beard, Like a strange infernal fowl, Half a Vampyre, half an Owl

It is usual with Aristophanes to omit that explanation which a poet of the new comedy would have put into a soliloguy or into a confidential conversation between the master and his slave. He gives his audience credit for being able to comprehend at once the previous views of the person whom he introduces

A simile by juxtaposition indirectly expressed, as when Adam is described 'tall and fair' beneath a palm tree, and the gigantic warriors in Homer standing before the 'lofty' gates. The indirect simile may be either beautiful or sublime, or, as in the present instance, ludicrous

Neptnne, the chief of the Embassy, in which Hercules and the barbarous Triballian deity are joined with him, has settled in his own mind a very satisfactory plan for the management of it. 'Heroules is my nephew, and of course looks np to me He will be easily managed if I can appear to consult and advise exclusively with him But I must begin by putting the Triballian wholly out of the question as a ragamuffin whom we are both equally ashamed of Otherwise their understandings are so much upon a par my poor nephew, I am sorry to say, is such a blockhead, that he and that heast, the Trihallian, from the mere natural sympathy of their stupidity, will join and act together in spite of me —He accordingly begins with the Triballian by settling his dress for him—and as soon as he has disposed of him and set him down as an unproduceable ruffian, he turns round to consult Hercules, who makes a stupid answer —Neptnne, like a kind uncle, endeavours quietly and calmly to set him right Up to this point everything appears promising, hat Neptune, alas i is deficient in presence of mind, he is encombered with his dignity, and above all, in the person of Peistbetairus, he is opposed to a politician infinitely his superior in resources and address—They advance within sight of Peisthetairus, who affects not to notice them, and remains looking down among the dishes apparently occupied with his sauces Neptune, of course, advances no farther, but remains with a decided attitude and look of dignity, ready to meet his eye, as soon as it shall be raised to encounter his Unfortunately, however, he is so much occupied with his own attitude, and with the look which seems to say, 'Well, sir, now you're at leisnre, -that he omits to restrain Heroules. who, more impatient and Indignant, presses forward with an annonnement of their arrival, calculated, as he thinks, to rouse and astonish Poisthetairus failing in his attempt to make an impression, and feeling himself at a loss, he remains exposed to the influence of his natural instincts, which attract him towards the pans and dishes -Hence a conversation is begun, a recognition takes place—the lee is broken and the negotiation opened while Neptune is left with his dignity in the background

NEPTUNE, the Triballian Envoy, HERCULES.

NEP. There's Nephelococcugia, that's the town, The point we're bound to, with our embassy.

(Turning to the TRIBALLIAN)

But you! What a figure have ye made yourself! What a way to wear a mantle! slouching off From the left shoulder! Hitch it round, I tell ye, On the right side. For shame,—come,—so; that's better.

These folds too, bundled up —There, throw them round Even and easy,—so.—Why, you're a savage, A natural born savage—Oh, democracy! What will it bring us to? when such a ruffian Is voted into an embassy!

Thi (To Neptune who is pulling his dress about) Come, hands off!

Hands off!

NEP Keep quiet, I tell ye, and hold your tongue, For a very beast; in all my life in heaven, I never saw such another.—Hercules,

I say, what shall we do? What should you think? Her. What would I do? What do I think? I've told you Already—I think to throttle him—the fellow, Whoever he is, that's keeping us blockaded.

NEP Yes, my good friend; but we were sent, you know.

To treat for a Peace Our embassy is for peace HER. That makes no difference, or if it does,

It makes me long to throttle him the more

PEIS. (very busy, affecting not to see them)
Give me the Silphium spice—Where's the cheese-

Bring cheese here, somebody! Mend the charcoal fire. Her. Mortal, we greet you and hail you! Three of us

Three destres—

PEIS (without looking up) But I'm engaged at present.

A little busy, you see, mixing my sauce Her. Why sure! How can it be? what dish is this?

Buds seemingly!

Pers (without looking up) Some individual birds, Opposed to the popular democratic birds,

Render'd themselves obnoxious

So, you've pluck'd them, HER. And put them into sauce, provisionally?

PEIS (looking up) Oh! bless me, Hercules, I'm quite glad to see you!

What brings you here?

HER. We're come upon an embassy From Heaven, to put an end to this same war— SERV (to PRISTRETAIRUS) The cruet's empty, our oil is out.

No matter, PEIS Fetch more, fetch plenty, I tell yo. We shall want it. For, in fact it brings no benefit to us.

The continuance of the War prolonging it, And you yourselves, by being on good terms Of harmony with the gods—why, for the future, You'd never need to know the want of rain, For water in your tanks, and we could serve ye With reasonable, seasonable weather,

According as you wish'd it, wet or dry

And this is our commission coming here.

As envoys, with authority to treat

Well, the dispute, you know, from the beginning

Did not originate with us The war (If we could hope in any way to bring you To reasonable terms) might be concluded. Our wishes, I declare it, are for Peace.

If the same wish prevails upon your part, The arrangement in itself, is obvious --A retrocession on the part of Jupiter -The Birds again to be reintegrated In their estate of sovereignity -This seems

The fair result; and if we can conclude, I shall hope to see the ambassadors to supper.

HER. Well, this seems satisfactory; I consent NEP. (to HERCULES) What's come to ye? What do ye mean? Are ye gone mad?

You Glutton! would you run your own father, Depriving him of his ancient sovereignty?

Peis (to Neptune, with the civil, good-humoured sneer of a superior understanding)

Indeed!—And would not it be a better method For all you deities, and confirm your power, To leave the Birds to manage things below?

You sit there, muffled in your clouds above, While all mankind are shifting, skulking, lurking,

And perjuring themselves here out of sight

Whereas, if you would form a steady strict Alliance with the Birds, when any man (Using the common old familiar oath-By Jupiter and the crow') 1 forswore himself,

The Crow would pick his eyes out, for his pains

NEP. Well, that seems plausible—that 's fairly put.

HER. I think so, too.

PEIS (to the TRIBALLIAN.) Well, what say you? Say true 2 TRIB

Pers (very volubly,—quite at his ease) He consents, you see! But I'll explain now The services and good offices we could do you

Suppose a mortal made a vow, for instance, To any o' You, then he delays and shuffles, And says 'The gods are easy creditors'. In such a case, we could assist ye, I say, To levy a fine

NEP (open to conviction, but anxious to proceed on sure ground) How would you do it? Tell me PEIS Why, for example, when he's counting money,

Or sitting in the bath, we give the warrant

1 See p 194, note 3

² It is singular that these two syllables are the last syllables of the word (or sentence) in his own language by which the Triballian expresses his consent

To a pursuivant of ours, a Kite or Magpie, And they pounce down immediately, and distrain Cash or apparel, money or money's worth, To twice the amount of your demand upon him HER. Well, I'm for giving up the sovereignty,

For my part.

NEP (convinced, but wishing to avoid responsibility,

The Triballian, what says he? Heb. (aside to the Triballian, showing his fist)
You, Sir, do you want to be well bang'd or not?
Mind, how you vote! Take care how you provoke me
Trib Yaw, yaw Goot, goot

HER. He's of the same opinion NEP Then, since you're both agreed, I must agree. HER. (shouting to PEISTHETAIRUS, the negotiators having withdrawn to consult at the extremity of the stage.) Well, you'l We've settled this concern, you see, About the sovereignty, we're all agreed

Pers Oh, faith, there's one thing more, I recollect,

Before we part, a point that I must mention
As for dame Juno, we'll not speak of her,
I've no pretensions, Jupiter may keep her, But, for that other Queen, his manager, The sovereign goddess, her surrender to me Is quite an article indispensable

NEP (with gravity and dignity) Your views, I find. are not disposed for peace

We must turn homewards.

As you please, so be it. Cook, mind what you're about there with the sauce . Let's have it rich and savoury, thicken it up!

Hen. Hownow, man? Neptune! are you flying off?

Must we remain at war, here for a noman?

NEP But, what are we to do?

HER. Do! Why, make peace NEP (in great wrath, like a grave Uncle scolding a oreat fool of a Nephew)

I pity you really! I feel quite ashamed

And sorry to see you, ruining yourself! If anything should happen to your father, After surrendering the sovereignty, What's to become of you? When you yourself Have voted away your whole inheritance: At his decease, you must remain a beggar.

PEIS (aside to KEROULES) Ah there! I thought so; he's coming over ye;

Step here, a moment! Let me speak to ye! Your Uncle's chousing you, my poor dear friend, You've not a farthing's worth of expectation, From what your father leaves

By law. ye're illegitimate, ye know

HER Heighday! Why, what do you mean?

I mean the fact!

Your mother was a foreigner, Minerva Is counted an heiress, everybody knows; How could that be, supposing her own father To have had a lawful heir?

But, if my father HER. Should choose to leave the property to me,

In his last Will.

The law would cancel it! Pers And Neptune, he that's using all his influence To work upon ye, he'd be the very first To oppose ye, and oust ye, as the testator's brother.

I'll tell ye what the law says, Solon's law:

'A foreign heir shall not succeed,1

Where there are children of the lawful breed:

But, if no native heir there be, The kinsman nearest in degree Shall enter on the property'

¹ Memory must have been in the earliest times the sole repository of knowledge of every kind Every means therefore of assistance to the memory was most carefully cultivated. Amongst other instances, in order to facilitate the requisite knowledge and recollection of them, the Laws themselves were composed and recorded in a metrical form Hence the same word in Greek signifies both a Song and a Law

Her. Does nothing come to me, then !- Nothing at all.

Of all my father leaves?

Nothing at all, I should conceive. But you perhaps can tell me, Did he, your father, ever take ye with him, To get ye enroll'd upon the register?

HEB No truly, I-thought it strange-he-never did

PEIS Well, but don't think things strange Don't stand there, stammering,

Puzzling and gaping Trust yourself to me, 'Tis I must make your fortune after all!

If you'll reside and settle amongst us here, I'll make you chief Commander among the Birds, Captain, and Autocrat and everything Here you shall domineer and rule the roast, With splendour and opulence and pigeon's milk.

Hen. (in a more audible voice, and in a formal decided tone.1)

I agreed with you before I think your argument Unanswerable. I shall vote for the surrender PEIS (to NEPTUNE) And what say you? NEP (firmly and vehemently) Decidedly, I dissent.

PEIS Then it depends upon our other friend, It rests with the Triballian, what say you? The Me tell you, pretty girl, grand beautiful Qucen.

Give him to Birds

Her. Aye, give her up, you mean. NEP Mean! He knows nothing about it. He means nothing

But chattering like a Magpie

Well, 'The Magnies'

¹ They had withdrawn apart, and their previous conversation was supposed not to have been audible to Neptune and the Triballian, whose hy play might have consisted in Neptune's formal attempts to soothe and gain the Triballian, who would only shrug up his shoulders.

He means, the Magpies or the Birds in general. The Republic of the Birds—their government—That the surrender should be made to them ¹

NEP. (in great wrath) Well, settle it yourselves;

amongst yourselves;

In your own style: I've nothing more to say Her. (to Peisthetairus) Come, we're agreed, in fact, to grant your terms,

But you must come, to accompany us to the sky, To take back this same Queen, and the other matters.

Peis. (very quietly.) It happens lucky enough, with this provision

For a marriage-feast It seems prepared on purpose. HER Indeed, and it does Suppose in the meanwhile,

I superintend the cookery, and turn the roast,

While you go back together.

NEP. (with a start of surprise and disgust) Turn the roast!

A pretty employment! Won't you go with us?

HER No, thank ye; I'm mighty comfortable here.

PEIS Come, give me a marriage robe; I must be going.

We have here another satiric song, of the same fanciful humour as the preceding, descriptive of imaginary wonders in an unknown world. In the last instance the Poet had exhibited a caricature of the Socratic school of Philosophy. The same vein of ridicule is now directed against another novelty, tending equally, in the opinion of the poet (more just in this than in the preceding instance) to produce an undesirable change in the general character of the nation.

Mercenary professors and teachers of rhetoric, for the most part foreigners (the Gorgias for instance here mentioned was a Sicilian), had of late been received and encouraged in Athens. Their public exhibitions, which were generally resorted to, had operated as an incentive to the natural propensity of the Athenian people, already

¹ Peisthetairus being sure of his point, amuses himself with arguing nonsensically to provoke Neptune

more than enough disposed to divert their attention to the unproductive pursuits of litigation and speechifying While at the same time their private lessons (the course of instruction by which they engaged to communicate the secrets of their art, and to form young practitioners) were purchased in some instances at an enormous price, by young men of wealth aspiring to political eminence and celebrity

CHORUS.

Along the Sycophantic shore, And where the savage tribes adore The waters of the Clepsydra,1 There dwells a nation, stern and strong. Armed with an enormous tongue, Wherewith they smite and slay

With their tongues, they reap and sow, And gather all the fruits that grow. The vintage and the grain, Gorgias is their Chiof of pride, And many more there be beside Of mickle might and main.

Good they never teach, nor show But how to work men harm and woe. Unrighteousness and wrong . And hence, the oustom doth arise. When beasts are slam in sacrifice. We sever out the tongue.4

It has been already observed, that this play, in the success of which, as a sedative to the popular meanity,

¹ The Clepsydra, or Water Clock, marked the time allotted to each Advocate. It was a prominent object in the Courts of Justice. The name also belonged to certain streams and springs

² Dangerous as accusers Their salaries and profits.

⁴ This sacrificial form was peculiar to the Athenians.

the higher orders of the community were essentially interested, was exhibited with a singular recklessness

of expense

The concluding scene seems to have been equal in magnificence to those of the most gorgeous tragedies; and it is remarkable that in the passage immediately following, contrary to the invariable custom of the poet, there is no tinge of burlesque. The Poet has throughout, as a Poet, imitated the style of Sophocles; while under his direction as the manager of a Comic Drama, the actor who personated Peisthetairus must have been instructed to reduce the scene to the level of comedy, by his airs and gestures characteristic of unaccustomed dignity and authority. It must have been a very delicate and amusing piece of acting! An elderly man, a sharp thorough-going fellow—to see him

> Assume the god, Affect to nod, And seem to shake the spheres!

The Choral songs which follow are of a peculiar and by no means obvious character, which it is rather difficult to define, and not very easy to express in imitation In the Comedy of the Peace we have a Rustic Epithalamium, perfectly rustic, and probably not very different from the rustic extempore Poetry of the same race at the present day But in this instance we have a Town Epithalamium, such as we may suppose to have been composed and perpetrated in honour of the nuptials of the more noble and wealthy families in Athens The vulgar town Poet is anxious to exhibit his education by imitating and borrowing passages from the most approved lyrical poets, but at the same time reduces all their imagery and expressions to the natural level of his own dullness. Thus maintaining, in the verse itself, that balance of the ludicrous and sublime, which in the first part of the scene had resulted from the contrast of the Poetry and the action.

Some parts of the Epithalamium of Catullus (see 1 100 and the following stanzas) are evidently a humorous imitation of the vulgar Epithalamia at Rome Under cover of this character, he amused himself at the expense of his newly-married friends

HARBINGER or HERALD, announcing the approach of Pristhetairus

O fortunate! O triumphant! O beyond All power of speech or thought, supremely blest, Prosperous happy Birds!—Behold your King, Here in his glorious palace !- Mark his entrance. Dazzling all eyes, resplendent as a Star, Outshining all the golden lights, that beam, From the rich roof, even as a summer Sun, Or brighter than the Sun, blazing at Noon

He comes, and at his side a female form Of beauty ineffable, wielding on high, In his right hand, the winged thunderbolt, Jove's weapon While the fumes of meense spread, Circling around, and subtle odours steal Upon the senses from the wreathed smoke, Curling and rising in the tranquil air See, there he stands! Now must the sacred Muse Give with auspicious words her welcome due.

Semichorus

Stand aside and clear the ground, Spreading in a circle round With a worthy welcoming, To salute our noble King In his splendour and his pride, Coming hither, side by side With his happy lovely bride

O the fair delightful face! What a figure! What a grace! What a presence! What a carriage! What a noble worthy marriage!

Let the Birds rejoice and sing. At the wedding of the King Happy to congratulate Such a blessing to the state. Hymen Hymen Hoh! Jupiter, that god sublime,
When the Fates, in former time,
Match'd him with the Queen of Heaven,
At a solemn banquet given,
Such a feast was held above;
And the charming God of Love,
Being present in command,
As a Bridesman took his stand,
With the golden reins in hand.

Hymen Hymen Hoh!

PEIS I accept and approve the marks of your love, Your music and verse I applaud and admire ¹ But rouse your invention, and raising it higher, Describe me the terrible engine of Jove, The thunder of Earth and the thunder above.

The reader may have already observed, that in more than one instance the Poet directs the attention of his audience to the lavish expenditure of the Choregus This seems to have been the object of the following lines, introductory to a new display of theatrical thunder manufactured upon an improved principle

CHORUS

O dreaded Bolt of Heaven,
The Clouds with horror cleaving,
And ye terrestrial thunders deep and low
Closed in the subterranean caves 2 below,
That even at this instant growl and rage,
Shaking with awful sound this earthly stage;
Our King by you has gain'd his due;
By your assistance, yours alone,
Everything is made his own,
Jove's dominion and his throne;
And his happiness and pride,
His delightful lovely bride
Hymen Hymen Hoh!

Peisthetairus puts an end to their nonsense with condescension and affability ² Caves of the Theatre

PEISTHETAIRUS

Birds of ocean and of air,
Hither in a troop repair,
To the royal ceremony,
Our triumphant matrimony!
Come for us to feast and feed ye!
Come to revel, dance, and sing!—
Lovely creature! Let me lead ye
Hand in hand, and wing to wing

THE FROGS

THE FROGS

BACCHUS, the patron of the stage, in despair at the decline of the dramatic art (which had lately been deprived of its best tragic authors, Sophocles and Euripides). determines to descend the infernal regions with the intention of procuring the release of Euripides appears accordingly, equipped for the expedition, with the lion's skin and club (in imitation of Hercules, whose success in a similar adventure has encouraged him to the attempt), he still retains, however, his usual effeminate costume, which forms a contrast with these heroic attri-Xanthias, his slave (like Silenus, the mythologic attendant of Bacchus), is mounted upon an ass. but. in conformity with the practice of other human slaves when attending their mortal masters upon an earthly lourney, he carries a certain pole upon his shoulder, at the ends of which the various packages, necessary for his master's accommodation, are suspended in equilibrio The first scene (which, if it had not been the first, might perhaps have been omitted) contains a censure of the gross taste of the audience (suitable to the character of Bacchus as patron of the stage) with allusions to some cotemporary rival authors, who submitted to court the applause of the vulgar hy mere buffoonery -The argument between Bacchus and Xanthias, at the end of this scene, probably contains some temporary allusion now unknown, hut is obviously, and in the first place. a humorous exemplification of the philosophical, verhal sophisms, not, in all probability, new, even then, but which were then, for the first time, introduced in Athens, and which may be traced from thence to the schoolmen of the Middle Ages. Xanthias carries the hundles passed et formaliter, the ass carries them active et materialiter

THE FROGS

BACCHUS, XANTHIAR.

X. Master, shall I begin with the usual jokes That the audience always laugh at?

B If you please, Any joke you please except 'being overburthen'd'

Any joke you please except 'being overburthen'd'
—Don't use it yet—We've time enough before us.

X. Well, something else that 's comical and clever?

B I forbid being 'overpress'd and overburthen'd'

B I forbid being 'overpress'd and overburthen'd' X. Well, but the drollest joke of all—?

B Remember

There's one thmg I protest against—

X. What's that? B Why, shifting off your load to the other shoulder.

And fidgeting and complaining of the gripes.

X. What then do you mean to say, that I must not

Sav

That I'm ready to befoul myself?

B (peremptorily) By no means—

Except when I take an emetic 1

X (in a sullen, muttering tone, as if rescribed of hard usage.) What's the use, then, Of my being burthen'd here with all these bundles, If I'm to be deprived of the common jokes' That Phrynichus, and Lycis, and Ameipsias

Allow the servants always in their comedies, Without exception, when they carry bundles?

B Pray, leave them off—for those ingenious sallies

As a filthy joke might assist the operation of the medicine.
2 Xanthias considers these jokes as the lawful vails and per quastes of servants on such occasions

Have such an effect upon my health and spirits

That I feel grown old and dull when I get home X. (as before, or with a sort of half-mutinous whine)

It's hard for me to suffer in my limbs,

To be overburthen'd and debarr'd from joking.

B Well, this is monstrous, quite, and insupportable! Such insolence in a servant! When your master Is going afoot and has provided you

With a beast to carry ye

X What! do I carry nothing?

B. You're carried yourself.

But I carry bundles, don't I?

But the beast bears all the bundles that you carry.

X. Not those that I carry myself—'tis I that carry 'em.

You're carried yourself, I tell ye

I can't explain it,

But I feel it in my shoulders plainly enough
B Well, if the beast don't help you, take and try; Change places with the ass and carry him

X (in a tone of mere disgust)
Oh, dear! I wish I had gone for a volunteer,1

And left you to yourself I wish I had.

B. Dismount, you rascal! Here, we're at the house

Where Hercules lives — Holloh, there! who's within there [Bacchus kicks outrageously at the door.

HERCULES BACCHUS XANTHIAS

H. Who's there? (He has bang'd at the door, whoever he is.

With the kick of a centaur) 2 What's the matter,

¹ Xanthias is wearied out by mere petulance and folly, not with hard usage

Numbers of the slaves at that time had been enfranchised on condition of naval service

² The expression is characteristic, the Centaur being a familiar beast to Hercules (aside.) Ha! Lanthias!

X. What?

B (aside.) Did vo mind how he was frighten'd?

A I suppose he was afraid you were going mad. H (ande) By Jove! I shall laugh outright, I'm ready to burst.

I shall laugh, in spite of myself, upon my life

[Hercules shifts about, and turns aside to disguise his laughter this apparent shyness confirms Bacchus in the opinion of his own ascendancy, which he manifests accordingly

B (with a tone of protection)

Come bither, friend -What ails ye? Stop this way.

I want to speak to ye.

H. (with a good humoured, but unsuccessful endeavour to suppress laughter, or to conceal it Suppose him, for instance, speaking with his hand before his mouth) But I can't belp laughing,

To see the lion's skin with a saffron robe, And the club with the women's sandals—altogether— What's the meaning of it all? Have you been abroad?

I've been aboard-in the Fleet-with Cleisthenes.

H (sharply and trontcally) You fought—? B (briskly and sillily) Yes, that we did—we gain'd a victory,

And we sunk the enemies' ships-thirteen of 'em

'So you woke at last and found it was a dream ?' 1

B But aboard the floet, as I pursued my studies, I read the tragedy of Andromeda², And then such a vehement passion struck my heart,

You can't imagine

A small one, I suppose, Н My little fellow-a moderate little passion?

A play of Euripides

A proverbial sarcasm, by which the auditor of an improbable story affects to suppose that the narrator bas been relating a

B. (ironically: the irony of imbecility.) It's just as small as Molon is—that's all—

Molon the wrestler, I mean—as small as he is—1

- H Well, what was it like? what kind of thing? what was it?
- B. (meaning to be very serious and interesting.)
 No, friend, you must not laugh; it's past a joke; It's quite a serious feeling—quite distressing; I suffer from 1t-

H (bluntly) Well, explain. What was it?
B I can't declare it at once, but I'll explain it Theatrically and enigmatically:

(With a buffoonish assumption of tragic gesture and emphasis)

Were you ever seized with a sudden passionate longing For a mess of porridge?

H. Often enough, if that's all.

B. Shall I state the matter to you plainly at once; Or put it circumlocutorily?

H. Not about the porridge I understand your ınstance

B Such is the passion that possesses me For poor Euripides, that's dead and gone, And it's all in vain people trying to persuade me From going after him

 \mathbf{H} What, to the shades below?

Yes, to the shades below, or the shades beneath

To the undermost shades of all. I'm quite determined. H But what's your object?

B. (with a ridiculous imitation of tragical action and emphasis) Why, my object is

That I want a clever poet—'for the good,
The gracious and the good, are dead and gone;
The worthless and the weak are left alive's

H. Is not Iophon a good one ?—He 's alive, sure?

Molon was remarkable for his bulk and stature

A ridicule of the circuitous preambles to confidential communications in tragedy

* The quotation is from Euripides

If he's a good one, he's our only good one. But it's a question, I'm in doubt about him 1

Thero's Sophocles, ho's older than Euri

pides-

If you'd go so far for 'em you'd best bring him.

B No, first I'll try what Iophon 2 can do, Without his father, Sopliocles, to assist him

-Besides, Euripides is a clever raseal.

A sharp, contriving rogue that will make a shift To desert and steal away with me, the other Is an easy minded soul, and always was

Where's Agathon 93

В Ho's gone and left me too. Regretted by his friends, a worthy poet-

 \mathbf{H}

Gone! Where, poor soul?

To the banquets of the blest! \mathbf{B}

But then you've Xenoeles-4

Yes! a plague upon him! В

Pythangelus too-

But nobody thinks of me. Standing all this while with the bundles on my shoulder H. But have not you other young ingenious youths That are fit to out-talk Europides ten times over.

To the amount of a thousand, at least, all writing tragedy-?

B They're good for nothing- Warblers of the Grove' - Little, foolish, fluttering things '-poor puny wretches.

¹ Upon the subject of his own profession, Bacchus talks in a tone approaching very nearly to sense and consistency, and is treated by Hercules with more respect.

² A tragic poet, the son of Sophocles, and supposed to have been assisted by him in the composition of his tragedies

A tragic poet, a young man of wealth and of refined habits, who had lately died at the Court of Archelaus, whither he had retired from Athens

One of the theatric family of Carcinus, the constant butts of Aristophanes's humour

⁵ An obscure writer of tragedies. The Scholiast notices the sarcastic effect of Aanthias's interruption.

That dawdle and dangle about with the tragic muse;

Incapable of any serious meaning—

There's not one hearty poet amongst them all
That's fit to risk an adventurous valuant phrase.

H. How—'hearty'? What do you mean by
'valuant phrases'?

B (the puzzle of a person who is called upon for a definition) I mean a...kind. of a...doubtful, bold expression

To talk about . . . 'The viewless foot of Time'-(Tragic emphasis in the quotations)

And . . 'Jupiter's Secret Chamber in the Skies'—
And about . 1 a person's soul . . not being perjured When . the tongue . . forswears itself . . . in spite of the soul

H Do you like that kind of stuff?

В I'm crazy after it. H. Why, sure, it's trash and rubbish—Don't you think so?

'Men's fancies are their own-Let mine alone ' 2___

H. But, in fact, it seems to me quite bad—rank nonsense

B. You'll tell me next what I ought to like for supper

X. But nobody thinks of me here, with the bundles.

B (with a careless, easy, voluble, degagé style)
—But now to the business that I came upon—

(Upon a footing of equality—The tone of a person who is dispatching business off-hand, with readiness and unconcern)

(With the apparel that you see—the same as yours)
To obtain a direction from you to your friends
(To apply to them—in case of anything—
If anything should occur), the acquaintances
That received you there—(the time you went before

A confused, vulgarized recollection of Euripides
The 1st citation is from Aeschylus, the 2nd from Sophocles, the 3rd from Euripides
2 Proverbial

-For the business about Cerberus 1)-if you'd give me Their names and their directions, and communicate

Any information relative to the country, The roads,—the streets,—the bridges, and the brothels, The wharves,—the public walks,—the public houses, The fountains,—aqueducts,—and inns and taverns, And lodgings,—free from bugs and fleas, if possible, If you know any such-

But nobody thinks of me. What a notion! You! will you risk it? are ye mad ?

B (meaning to be very serious and manly) I beseech you say no more—no more of that, But inform me briefly and plainly about my journey The shortest road and the most convenient one

H. (with a tone of easy, indolent, deliberate banter)
Well,—which shall I tell ye first, now?—Let me see now-

There's a good convenient road by the Rope and Noose .

The Hanging Road.

No, that's too close and stiffing H. Then, there 's an easy, fair, well beaten track, As you go by the Pestle and Mortar—

What, the Hemlock? \mathbf{B} H. To be sure-

That's much too cold-it will never do They tell me it strikes a chill to the logs and feet.2 H. Should you like a speedy, rapid, downhill road?

Indeed I thould, for I'm a sorry traveller

Go to the Keramicus then. H.

В What then?

Get up to the very top of the tower

R What then?

account of the death of Socrates

¹ Hercules was employed by Eurystheus to drag up Cerberus from the gates of Hell. This adventure furnishes several inci dents in the course of this play

The effects of the hemlock are thus described in Plato's

H. Stand there and watch when the Race of the Torch 1 begins;

And mind when you hear the people cry 'Start! Start!'

Then start at once with 'em

В Me? Start? Where from?

H From the top of the tower to the bottom

B. No, not I. It's enough to dash my brains out! I'll not go

Such a road upon any account

Ħ Well, which way then?

В The way you went yourself

But it's a long one, For first you come to a monstrous bottomless lake

B And what must I do to pass?

H. You'll find a boat there;

A little tiny boat, as big as that,

And an old man that ferries you over m it,

Receiving twopence as the usual fee

B Ah! the same twopence 2 governs everything Wherever it goes—I wonder how it managed To find its way there?

H. Theseus introduced it 5 -Next you'll meet serpents, and wild beasts, and monsters.

(Suddenly, and with a shout in Bacchus's ear) Horrific to behold!

B (starting a little) Don't try to fright me;
You'll not succeed, I promise you—I'm determined.
H Then there's an abyss of mire and floating filth, In which the damn'd lie wallowing and overwhelm'd; The unjust, the cruel, and the inhospitable; And the barbarous bilking Cullies that withhold

1 A sacred race in honour of Minerva, Vulcan, and Prometheus. The runners carried a lighted torch —A ludicrous description of it occurs further on towards the end of the 4th Act

2 Twopence, the salary of the poorer citizens, who sat as jurymen, and who were in fact the arbiters of the lives and fortunes

of their subjects and fellow-citizens

The Athenian hero, when his adventures led him to penetrate into the infernal regions, is supposed to have introduced the characteristic type of his native city.

The price of intercourse with fraud and wrong, The incestuous, and the particides, and the robbers, The perjurers, and assassins, and the wretches That wilfully and presumptuously transcribe Extracts and trash from Morsimus's plays.

And, by Jove! Kinesias with his Pyrrhio

dancors

Ought to be there—they're worse, or quite as bad, H But after this your sense will be saluted With a gentle breathing sound of flutes and voices, And a beautiful spreading light like ours on earth, And, myrtle glades and happy choirs among, Of women and men with rapid applause and mirth 1 B And who are all those folks?

The Initiated.

X. (gives indications of restiveness, as if ready to throw down his bundles)

I won't stand here like a mule in a procession

Any longer with these packages and bundles

H (hastily, in a civil hurry, as when you shake a man by the hand, and shove him out of the room, and give him your best wishes and advice all at once.)

They'll tell you everything you want to know, For they're establish'd close upon the road, By the corner of Pluto's house—so fare you well. Farewell, my little fellow Exit

B (pettishly)
I wish you better
(to Xanthias) You, sirrsh, take your bundles up again.
X. What, before I put them down?

Yes! now this moment.

X. Nah! don't msist, there's plenty of people going

As corpses with the convenience of a carriage. They'd take it for a trifle gladly enough.

B But if we meet with nobody?

X. Then I'll take 'em. Come, come, that's fairly spoken, and in good

¹ A description of the existence allotted to those who had been initiated in the mysteries of Ceres and Bacchus

H. Stand there and watch when the Race of the Torch 1 begins;

And mind when you hear the people cry 'Start / Start /'

Then start at once with 'em.

Me? Start? Where from? В

H. From the top of the tower to the bottom

No, not I. It's enough to dash my brains out! I'll not go Such a road upon any account

H Well, which way then?

В The way you went yourself

But it's a long one, For first you come to a monstrous bottomless lake.

B. And what must I do to pass?

H. You'll find a boat there;

A little tiny boat, as big as that,

And an old man that ferries you over in it,

Receiving twopence as the usual fee

B Ah! the same twopence 2 governs everything Wherever it goes—I wonder how it managed To find its way there?

H Theseus introduced it 3 -Next you'll meet serpents, and wild beasts, and monsters.

(Suddenly, and with a shout in Bacchus's ear) Horrific to behold!

B (starting a little) Don't try to fright me;
You'll not succeed, I promise you—I'm determined.
H. Then there's an abyss of mire and floating filth, In which the damn'd lie wallowing and overwhelm'd; The unjust, the cruel, and the inhospitable; And the barbarous bilking Cullies that withhold

A sacred race in honour of Minerva, Vulcan, and Prometheus. The runners carried a lighted torch —A ludicrous description of it occurs further on towards the end of the 4th Act

2 Twopence, the salary of the poorer citizens, who sat as jurymen, and who were in fact the arbiters of the lives and fortunes

of their subjects and fellow-citizens

The Athenian hero, when his adventures led him to penetrate into the infernal regions, is supposed to have introduced the characteristic type of his native city The price of intercourse with fraud and wrong, The incestuous, and the parrieides, and the robbers, Tho perjurers, and assassins, and the wretches That wilfully and presumptuously transcribe Extracts and trash from Morsimus's plays.

And, by Jovo! Kinesias with his Pyrrhic

dancers

Ought to be there—they're worse, or quite as bad. H. But after this your sense will be saluted With a gentlo breathing sound of flutes and voices, And a beautiful spreading light like ours on earth, And, myrtle glades and happy choirs among, Of women and men with rapid applause and mirth B And who are all those folks?

H The Initiated. X. (gives indications of restiveness, as if ready to throw down his bundles)

I won't stand here like a mule in a procession

Any longer with these packages and bundles

H (hastily, in a civil hurry, as when you shake a man by the hand, and shove him out of the room, and give him your best wishes and advice all at once)

They'll tell you everything you want to know, For they're establish'd close upon the road, By the corner of Pluto's house—so fare you well. Farewell, my httle fellow [Exit

B (pettially) I wish you better (to XANTHIAS) You, sirrah, take your bundles up again.

X. What, before I put them down?

Yes! now this moment.

Nah! don't msist, there's plenty of people going

As corpses with the convenience of a carriage, They'd take it for a trifle gladly enough

But if we meet with nobody?

Then I'll take 'em.

Come, come, that's fairly spoken, and in good time.

A description of the existence allotted to those who had been initiated in the mysteries of Ceres and Bacchus.

For there they're carrying a corpse out to be buried. (A funeral, with a corpse on an open bier crosses

—Holloh ' you, there—you Deadman—can't you hear? Would you take any bundles to hell with ye, my good fellow?

DEADMAN 1 What are they?

These В.

Then I must have two drachmas. D

B I can't—you must take less

Bearers, move on. D. (peremptorily)

No, stop! we shall settle between us-you're so hasty

D. It's no use arguing; I must have two drachmas B (emphatically and significantly) Ninepence!
D. I'd best be alive again at that rate [Exit.

B Fine airs the fellow gives himself—a rascal! I'll have him punish'd, I vow, for overcharging Best give him a good beating. give me the bundles.

I'll carry 'em

B You're a good, true-hearted fellow; And a willing servant—Let's move on to the ferry.

The author has condescended to gratify the popular taste alluded to in the first scene, without intrenching upon the pure humour of his dialogue Throughout the preceding scene, Xanthias acts a part in dumb show, exhibiting various attitudes and contortions of weariness and restlessness his impatience breaks out in four interruptions, three of which are so managed as to produce a comic effect In the first, Xanthias puts himself in 8 rediculous juxtaposition with Pythangelus, in a terminates a discussion proverbially endless, second lost enables Hercules to put an end to a dialogue and the would otherwise have been too long) with (which would have been too long) with an air of brevity and dispatch suited to his character Hercules and Bacchus offer a contrast of the two extremes Hercules and feeble character Strength is represented

¹ We collect from the Scholiast that the part of the Deadman 1 We collect with a tone of fastidious valetudinary languor

in a state of calmness and playful repose, and feebleness in a paroxysm of occasional energy, conformably to the practice of ancient artists in their serious compositions

The dialogue with the Deadman, besides its merit as an incomparable sample of humorous nonsense, has the advantage of introducing the spectators in imagina-tion to the very suburhs of the infernal regions, for, if we look to the strict localities of the stage, nothing else intervenes between the dialogue at the door of Horcules's house (in Thebes, as the Scholiast supposes) and the passage of the Styx, which immediately follows

CHARON BACCHUS XANTHIAS

Cn. Hov! Bear a hand, there—Heave ashore.

What's this?1 \mathbf{B}

X. The lake it is—the place he told us of By Jove 1 and there's the boat-and here's old

Charon

B Well, Charon !-Welcome, Charon !-Welcome

kındly l

Who wants the ferryman? Anybody waiting To remove from the sorrows of life? A passage. anybody?

To Lethe's Wharf !- to Cerberus's Reach ? To Tartarus ?-- to Taenarus ?-- to Perdition ?

B Yes, L

Cn. Get in then.

B (hesitatingly) Tell me, where are you going? To Perdition really—?

CH. (not sarcastically, but civilly, in the way of busi Yes, to oblige you, I will

With all my heart-Step in there.

В Have a care! Take care, good Charon !—Charon, have a care!
(BACCHUS gets into the boat.)
Come, Xanthlas, come!

I take no slaves aboard CH.

Alluding to the change of scene which took place at this moment.

Except they've volunteer'd for the naval victory.¹
X I could not—I was suffering with sore eyes

CH. You must trudge away then, round by the end of the lake there.

X And whereabouts shall I wait?

Cн. At the Stone of Repentance, By the Slough of Despond beyond the Tribulations; You understand me?

Yes. I understand you;

A lucky, promising direction, truly.

CH (to BAC) Sit down at the oar-Come quick, if there's more coming!

(To Bac again.) Holloh! what's that you're doing? [BACCHUS is seated in a buffoonish attitude on the side of the boat where the oar was fastened What you told me. \mathbf{B}

I'm sitting at the oar.

Cн. Sit there, I tell you,

You Fatguts, that's your place

B (changes his place.) Well, so I do.

CH. Now ply your hands and arms
B (makes a silly motion with his arms) Well, so I do

CH You'd best leave off your fooling. Take to the oar.

And pull away

 ${f B}$ But how shall I contrive? I've never served on board—I'm only a landsman; I'm quite unused to it—

We can manage it. As soon as you begin you shall have some music

That will teach you to keep time

В. What music's that?

CH. A chorus of Frogs—uncommon musical Frogs. B. Well, give me the word and the time

CH.

Whooh up, up; whooh up, up.

¹ The victory of Arginusae, where the slaves who were enlisted lought for the first time.

Chorus of FROGS

This Chorus, from the clutter of cognate consonants, g, k, and ch, which appears in some parts of it, should seem to have been intended by the author as a caricature of some cotemporary dramatical lyrics With the assistance of the Northumbrian bur, some of the lines may be made to croak with very tolerable effect, others should seem intended as a contrast, and contain some pretty imagery -The spelling of the words of the Chorus is accommodated to the actual pronnnciation of the Frogs, which, it is presumed, has remained unaltered The B in the Brekeke-kesh is very soft, and assimilates to the V The e in kesh is pronounced like es in lessure. and the last syllable prolonged and accented with a higher tone The word, as commonly pronounced by scholars (with the ictus or English accent on the third syllable), bears no resemblance to the sound which it is meant to imitate, which has, on the contrary, a slight ictus on the first syllable -The learned reader is requested to estimate the truth of this translation, not by direct collation with the text of the original, but by those impressions of its general spirit and effect which may remain in his memory, or (more fairly still) by a reference to the assignable or supposeable effects intended to be produced by the original.

CHORUS

Brekeke kesh, koash, koash, Shall the Choral Quiristers of the Marsh ¹ Be censured and rejected as hoarse and harsh, And their Chromatic essays

Deprived of praise?
No, let us raise afresh
Our obstreperous Brekeke kesh,
The customary oroak and ory

Of the creatures At the theatres.

The theatre of Bacchus in the marsh — Anti Lyrical caricature. In their yearly revelry. Brekeke-kesh, koash, koash.

B (rowing in great misery.)

How I'm maul'd, How I'm gall'd;

Worn and mangled to a mash— They there go! 'Koash, koash'!

Frogs. Brekeke-kesh, koash, koash.

B Oh, beshrew,

All your crew;

You don't consider how I smart

FROGS Now for a sample of the Art!

Brekeke-kesh, koash, koash

B I wish you hang'd, with all my heart.

-Have you nothing else to say? 'Brekeke-kesh, koash' all day!

Frogs. We've a right,

We've a right;

And we croak at ye for spite.

We've a right; We've a right; Day and night, Day and night; Night and day,

Still to creak and croak away.

Phoebus and every Grace

Admire and approve of the croaking race; 1

And the egregious guttural notes

That are gargled and warbled in their lyrical throats

In reproof
Of your scorn
Mighty Pan
Nods his horn;
Beating time
To the rime
With his hoof,

¹ Anti-Lyrical caricature.

With his hoof.

What a twist! What a sprain!

What a sprain Frogs. Once again—

We renew the tuneful strain. Brekeke-kesh, koash, koash.

B. I disdain—(Hang the pain!)
All your nonsense, noise, and trash.
Oh, my blister! Oh, my sprain!

From Brekeke-kesh, koash, koash
Friends and Frogs, we must display
All our powers of voice to-day;
Suffer not this stranger here,
With fastidious foreign ear,
To confound us and abash.
Brekeke-kesh, koash, koash.

B. Well, my spirit is not broke,

If it's only for the joke,

I'll outdo you with a croak.

Here it goes—(very loud) 'Koash, koash'.

FROGS. Now for a glorious croaking crash, (Still louder.)

Brekeke-kesh, koash, koash.

B. (splashing with his oar.)

I'll disperse you with a splash.

Frogs. Brekeke-kesh, koash, koash.

B. I'll subdue

Your rebellious, noisy crew—

Have amongst you there, slap-dash.

[Strikes at them.

Frogs. Brekeke-kesh, koash, koash. We defy your oar and you.

CH. Hold! We're ashore just—shift your oar. Get out.

-Now pay for your fare.

B. There—there it is—the two pence.

CHARON returns BACCHUS, finding himself alone and in a strange place, begins to call out

Hoh, Xanthias! Xanthias, I say! Where's \mathbf{B} Xanthias?

X. A hoy! В Come here

X I'm glad to see you, master

 \mathbf{B} What's that before us there !

 $\bar{\mathbf{x}}$ The mire and darkness В Do you see the villains and the perjurers

That he told us of?

X. Yes, plain enough, don't you ? Ah! now I see them, indeed, quite plain-and В now too * [Turning to the audience.

Well, what shall we do next?

X. We'd best move forward, For here's the place that Hercules there inform'd us Was haunted by these monsters?

 \mathbf{B} Ob, confound him! He vapour'd and talk'd at random to deter me From venturing —He 's amazingly conceited

And jealous of other people, is Hercules, He reckon'd I should rival him, and, in fact (Since I've come here so far), I should rather like To meet with an adventure in some shape,

X. By Jove! and I think I hear a kind of a noise

В Where ! where ?

X. There, just behind us В

Go behind, then. $\overline{\mathbf{x}}$. There !-- it's before us now -- There !

 \mathbf{B}

Go before, then. $\bar{\mathbf{x}}$. Ah! now I see it—a monstrous beast indeed i

В What kind?

A dreadful kind-all kinds at once. It changes and transforms itself about

Hercules, I 173

2 Similar compliments to the audience occur frequently in Aristophanes's plays.

To a mule and an ox,—and now to a beautiful creature; A woman ¹

Where? where is she? Let me seize her.

X. But now she's turn'd to a mastiff all of a sudden.

B It's the Weird hag! the Vampyre!1

X. (collectedly.) Like enough.

She's all of a blaze of fire about the mouth

B. (with great trepidation)

Has she got the brazen foot?

X (with cool despair.) Yes, there it is— By Jove '—and the cloven hoof to the other leg, Distinct enough—that 's she!

В. But what shall I do?

X. And I. too?

[BACCHUS runs to the front of the stage, where there was a seat of honour appropriated to the priest of Bacchus

 \mathbf{B} Save me, Priest, protect and save me, That we may drink and be jolly together hereafter. X. We're ruin'd, Master Hercules

В. Don't call me so, I beg: Don't mention my name, good friend, upon any account 2

Well, BACCHUS, then !

That's worse, ten thousand times. [Bacchus remains hiding his face before the seat of the priest—in the meantime affairs take a more favourable turn

X (cheerfully) Come, master, move along—Come, come this way.

B (without looking round) What's happen'd?

Why, we're prosperous and victorious; The storm of fear and danger has subsided,

And (as the actor said the other day) 'Has only left a gentle qualm behind'.

1 The Empusa, a fabulous hag, known only in the mythology of the Athenian nursery.

The Scholast gives us no explanation of the motive which induced Aristophanes to play this trick upon the priest

The Vampyre's vanished.

В Has she? upon your oath? X.

By Jove i she has

BX BX No. swear again By Jove !

Is she, by Jupiter?

By Jupiter!

Oh dear! what a fright I was in with the very sight of her

It turn'd me sick and pale-but see, the priest here! He has colour'd up quite with the same alarm 1

-What has brought me to this pass ?-It must be Jupiter

With his 'Chamber in the skies', and the 'Foot of Time 1 2

[A flute sounds BACCHUS remains absorbed and inattentive to the objects about him

Holloh, you! What?

Why, did you not hear?

X. BX. B Why, what?

The sound of a flute

(recollecting himself) Indeed! And there's a smell too.

A pretty mystical ceremonious smell Of torches. We'll watch here, and keep quite quiet.

The proper Chorus, consisting of the votaries of Bacchus. now appears upon the stage, or more properly speaking on the orchestra (a platform in front of the stage, but of inferior elevation) a circumstance which (as Schlegei bas justly observed) has been wholly overlooked in ali attempts to introduce a Chorus upon the modern stage. on which it is impossible for them to appear without ombarrassing the actors and distracting the attention of the spectators It is much to be regretted that the

An ancient Scholiast has ascertained that this was a personal allusion, and that the priest of Bacchus at that time was eminent for a red face explanations which Mr Schlegel has given of the local arrangement of the ancient stage (a subject on which he seems to have very clear ideas) have not been accompanied with graphic illustrations which would make them

equally intelligible to his readers

The following scene is a humorous representation of the concluding ceremony of the Eleusinian mysteries, on the last day of which the worship of Bacchus, under the invocation of Iacchus, was united with that of Ceres Iacchus seems to have been the last Avatar of the worship of Bacchus, as Pan was the first For an account of the character of this worship, and its extreme discrepancy from that of Ceres, with which it was united in this festival, see the learned and original work of Mr Ouvaroff, which has been translated and illustrated by Mr Christie is to be observed that though the votaries are celebrating the rites of Bacchus, Bacchus being disguised and incognito, or not considering himself concerned in the invocation of Iacchus, does not take any notice of them as his votaries or adherents

> CHORUS OF VOTARIES BACCHUS XANTHIAS. CHORUS Shouting and Singing.

Iacchus! Iacchus! Ho! Iacchus! Iacchus! Ho!

There, Master, there they are, the Initiated; All sporting about as he 1 told us we should find 'em. They're singing in praise of Bacchus like Diagoras 2

Indeed, and so they are; but we'll keep quiet

Till we make them out a little more distinctly.

CHORUS Song

Mighty Bacchus! Holy Power! Hither at the wonted hour Come away, Come away, With the wanton holiday,

1 Hercules

Frontically. Diagoras, a dithyrambic poet, and consequently a composer of hymns in praise of Bacchus, banished from Athens, and proscribed on a charge of Atheism

Where the revel uproar leads
To the mystic holy meads,
Where the frolic votaries fly,
With a tipsy shout and cry,
Flourishing the Thyrsus high,
Flinging forth, alert and airy,
To the sacred old vagary,
The tumultuous dance and song,
Sacred from the vulgar throng,
Mystic orgies, that are known
To the votaries alone—
To the mystic chorus solely—
Secret—unreveal'd—and holy

X. Oh glorious virgin, daughter of the goddess!
What a scent of roasted griskin reach'd my senses
B Keep quiet—and watch for a chance of a piece of the haslets.

CHORUS. Sono

Raise the fiery torches high!
Bacchus is approaching nigh,
Like the planet of the morn,
Breaking with the heary dawn,
On the dark solemnity—
There they flash upon the sight,
All the plain is blazing bright,
Flush'd and overflown with light
Age has cast his years away,
And the cares of many a day,
Sporting to the lively lay—
Mighty Bacchus! march and lead
(Torch in hand toward the mead)
Thy devoted humble Chorus,
Mighty Bacchus—move before us!

SEMICHORUS

Keep silence—keep peace—and let all the profane From our holy solemnity duly refrain, Whose souls unenlighten'd by taste, are obscure, Whose poetical notions are dark and impure,

Whose theatrical conscience Is sullied by nonsense; Who never were train'd by the mighty Cratinus 1 In mystical orgies poetic and vinous; Who delight in buffooning and jests out of season; Who promote the designs of oppression and treason; Who foster sedition, and strife, and debate; All traitors, in short, to the stage and the state; Who surrender a fort, or in private, export To places and harbours of hostile resort, Clandestine consignments of cables and pitch; In the way that Thorycion 2 grew to be rich From a scroundrelly dirty collector of tribute: All such we reject and severely prohibit: All statesmen retrenching the fees and the salaries Of theatrical bards, in revenge for the railleries, And jests, and lampoons, of this holy solemnity, Profanely pursuing their personal enmity, For having been flouted, and scoff'd, and scorn'd, All such are admonish'd and heartly warn'd;

> We warn them once, We warn them twice, We warn and admoni

We warn and admonish—we warn them thrice,
To conform to the law,
To retire and withdraw;
While the Chorus again with the formal saw (Fix'd and assign'd to the festive day)
Move to the measure and march away.

SEMIOHORUS

March! march! lead forth, Lead forth manfully, March in order all; . Bustling, hustling, justling, As it may befall;

1 Cratinus, doubly a votary of Bacchus, as a dramatic poet, and a hard drinker.

² Neither the Scholiasts nor commentators give us any information respecting Thorycion, except that he had a command at Aegina

£

Flocking, shouting, laughing,
Mocking, flouting, quaffing,
One and all,
All have had a belly full
Of breakfast brave and plentiful,
Therefore
Evermore
With your voices and your bedge

With your voices and your bodies Serve the goddess,

And raise

Songs of praise,
She shall save the country still,
And save it against the traitor's will,
So she says

SEMICHORUS

Now let us raise, in a different strain, The praise of the goddess ¹ the giver of grain, Imploring her favour With other behaviour, In measures more sober, submissive, and graver

SEMICHORUS.

Ceres, holy patroness,
Condescend to mark and bless,
With benevolent regard,
Foth the Chorus and the Bard,
Grant them for the present day
Many things to sing and say,
Follies intermix'd with sense,
Folly, but without offence.
Grant them with the present play
To bear the prize of verse away

SEMICHORUS

Now call again, and with a different measure, The power, mirth, and pleasure, The florid, active Bacchus, bright and gay, To journey forth and join us on the way

1 The author here marks the different character of the worship of Ceres, as compared with that of Bacchus.

SEMICHORUS

O Bacchus, attend! the customary patron Of every lively lay, Go forth without delay Thy wonted annual way. To meet the ceremonious holy matron 1: Her grave procession gracing, Thine airy footsteps tracing With unlaborious, light, celestial motion And here at thy devotion Behold thy faithful choir In pitiful attire: All overworn and ragged, This jerkin old and jagged, These buskins torn and burst. Though sufferers in the fray, May serve us at the worst To sport throughout the day; And there within the shades I spy some lovely maids, With whom we romp'd and revell'd, Dismantled and dishevell'd: With their bosoms open, With whom we might be coping. X. Well, I was always hearty, Disposed to mirth and ease. I'm ready to join the party. B² And I will, if you please

Some verses follow, which are sung by the Chorus, and in which some of the characters of the state are lampooned; they are not capable of translation, but are introduced appropriately, as the Bacchic and Eleusinian processions, which are here represented, were accompanied by a great licence of abuse and ribaldry.

¹ Ceres
² With a tone of imbecility, like Sir Andrew Aguecheek's
'Yes, and I too'—' Aye or I either'.

BACCHUS (to the CHORUS)

Prithee, my good fellows, Would you please to tell us Which is Pluto's door, I'm an utter stranger,

Never here before

Chorus Friend, you're out of danger,

You need not seek it far, There it stands before ye,

Before ye, where you are B Take up your bundles, Xanthias

X. Hang all bundles.

A bundle has no end, and these have none [Exeunt Baconus and Xanthias

SEMICHORUS

Now we go to dance and sing
In the consecrated shades,
Round the secret holy ring,
With the matrous and the maids,
Thither I must haste to bring
The mysterious early light,
Which must witness every rite
Of the joyous happy night.

Semichorus

Let us hasten—let us fly—
Where the lovely meadows lie,
Where the living waters flow,
Where the roses bloom and blow
—Heirs of Immortality,
Segregated, safe and pure,
Easy, sorrowless, secure,
Since our earthly course is run,
We behold a brighter sun.
Holy lives—a holy vow—
Such rewards await them now

Scene. The Gate of Pluto's Palace.

Enter BACCHUS and XANTHIAS

B (going up to the door with considerable hesitation) 1 Well, how must I knock at the door now? Can't ye tell me?

How do the native inhabitants knock at doors?

X. Pah; don't stand fooling there; but smite it smartly,

With the very spirit and air of Hercules.

B Holloh!

AEACUS (from within, with the voice of a royal and infernal porter.) Who's there?

B. (with a forced voice) 'Tis I, the valiant Hercules!

AE 2 (coming out)

Thou brutal, abominable, detestable, Vile, villamous, infamous, nefamous scoundrel! -How durst thou, villain as thou wert, to seize Our watch-dog, Cerberus, whom I kept and tended, Hurrying him off, half-strangled in your grasp? -But now, be sure we have you safe and fast, Miscreant and villain '-Thee, the Stygian chiffs, With stern adamantine durance, and the rocks Of maccessible Acheron, red with gore, Environ and beleaguer; and the watch, And swift pursuit of the hideous hounds of hell; And the horrible Hydra, with her hundred heads, Whose furious ravening fangs shall rend and tear thee;

¹ Compare this with Bacchus's behaviour at Hercules's door, where he knew he was quite safe

² The Scholiast informs us, that the horrific part of Aeacus's speech is an imitation of an attempt at the sublime, in Euripides's tragedy of 'Theseus', which is now lost; but which probably related to his descent to the infernal regions. The whole of the speech in the original is worth examining; it seems intended as a sportive display of poetical execution, passing, by short imperceptible gradations, through the whole Scale of Style, from the anger of comedy, to the loftiest and most exaggerated style of tragedy, till it is blown up into bombast, and finishes in Wrenching thy vitals forth, with the heart and midriff, While inexpressible Tartesian monsters, And grim Tithrasian Gorgons, toss and scatter, With olattering claws, thine intertwined intestines To them, with instant summons, I repair, Moving in hasty march with steps of speed.

[Aeacus departs with a tremendous tragical exit, and Bacchus falls to the ground in a fright

X. Holloh, you! What's the matter there—?

Oh dear,

I've had an accident.

X. Poh! poh! jump up!
Come! you ridiculous simpleton! don't lie there,
The people will see you

B Indeed I'm sick at heart, lah!

(Here a few lines are omitted)

X. Was there ever in heaven or earth such a coward?

B Me? A coward! Did not I show my presence of mind—

And call for a sponge and water in a moment? Would a coward have done that?

X. What else would he do?

B He'd have lain there stinking like a nasty coward,

But I jump'd up at once, like a lusty wrestler, 1 And look'd about, and wiped myself, withal.

X. Most manfully done!

B By Jove, and I think it was, But tell me, weren't you frighten'd with that speech?
—Such horrible expressions!

X. (coolly, but with conscious and intentional coolness)

No. not I.

I took no notice-

B Well, I'll tell you what,

But whene'er at wrestling matches they were worsted in the fray, Wiped their shoulders from the dust, denied the fall and fought away
The Knights 1 818. Since you're such a valiant-spirited kind of fellow, Do you be Me-with the club and the lion-skin, Now you're in this courageous temper of mind; And I'll go take my turn and carry the bundles.

X. Well—give us hold—I must humour you,

forsooth,

Make haste, (he changes his dress,) and now behold the Xanthian Hercules.

And mind if I don't display more heart and spirit.

B 1 Indeed, and you look the character completely, Like that heroic Melitensian hangdog— Come, now for my bundles I must mind my bundles

Enter PROSERPINE'S SERVANT MAID (a kind of Dame Quickly), who immediately addresses Xanthias

Dear Hercules Well, you're come at last Come m, For the goddess, as soon as she heard of it, set to work Baking peck loaves, and frying stacks of pancakes, And making messes of frumenty; there's an ox Besides, she has roasted whole, with a relishing stuffing, If you'll only just step in this way

X. (with dignity and reserve.) I thank you,

I'm equally obliged.

SERV MAID No, no, by Jupiter! We must not let you off, indeed. There 's wild fowl, And sweetmeats for the dessert, and the best of wine; Only walk in

X (as before) I thank you You'll excuse me SERV MAID No, no, we can't excuse you, indeed we can't.

There are dancing and singing girls besides

X (with dissembled emotion) What! dancers? SERV MAID Yes, that there are; the sweetest, charmingest things

That ever you saw—and there 's the cook this moment

Bacchus, now his mind is at ease, begins to be humorous Hercules had a temple at the village of Melite, but a sarcasm is implied against Callias, who was likewise of Melite, and used a hon-skin as his military dress

Is dishing up the dinner

X. (with an air of lofty condescension) Go before then.

And tell the girls—those singing girls you mention'd To prepare for my approach in person presently (To BACCHUS) You, sirrah! follow hehind me with the bundles

B Holloh, you! what, do you take the thing in carnest,

Because, for a joke, I drest you up like Hercules? [XANTHIAS continues to gesticulate as HERCULES Come. don't stand fooling, Xanthias You'll pro voke me

There, earry the bundles, sırrah, when I hid you X. (relapsing at once into his natural air) Why, sure, do you mean to take the things away That you gave me yourself of your own accord this instant?

B I never mean a thing, I do it at once Let go of the hon's skin directly, I tell you X. (resigning his heroical insignia with a tragical air and tone.)

To you, just gods, I make my last appeal.

Bear witness!

B What! the gods ?-do you think they mind you? How could you take it in your head, I wonder. Such a foolish fancy for a fellow like you, A mortal and a slave, to pass for Hercules?

X. There Take them. There you may have them—but, please God,

You may come to want my help some time or other.

CHORUS

Dexterous and wily wits Find their own advantage ever. For the wind where'er it sits. Leaves a berth secure and clever To the ready navigator. That foresees and knows the nature Of the wind and weather's drift;
And betimes can turn and shift
To the shelter'd easy side;
'Tis a practice proved and tried,
Not to wear a formal face;
Fix'd in attitude and place,
Like an image on its base;
'Tis the custom of the seas,
Which, as all the world agrees,
Justifies Theramenes 1

BACCHUS.

How ridiculous and strange;
What a monstrous proposition,
That I should condescend to change
My dress, my name, and my condition,
To follow Xanthias, and behave
Like a mortal and a slave;
To be set to watch outside
While he wallow'd in his pride,
Tumbling on a purple bed,
While I waited with submission,
To receive a broken head,
Or be kick'd upon suspicion
Of impertinence and peeping
At the joys that he was reaping.

As Bacchus was before made answerable for the offence which Hercules had committed in seizing Cerberus, he is now accused of other misdemeanours which Hercules (agreeably to the character of voracity and violence which was attributed to him by the comic writers) might be supposed to have committed in the course of the same expedition

¹ The political versatility of Theramenes is noticed in a subsequent passage, in the altercation between Aeschylus and Euripides. The naval allusion may be supposed to refer to his conduct towards his colleagues in command, after the battle of Arginusae.

Enter Two Women, Sutters or Keepers of an Eating

1 WOMAN What, Platana! Goody Platana! there! that 's he.

The fellow that rohs and cheats poor victuallers, That came to our house and cat those nineteen loaves.

2 Woman Aye, sure enough, that 's he, the very man X. (tauntingly to BACCHUS) There's mischief in the wind for somehody!

1 Woman -And a dozen and a half of cutlets and fried chops,

At a penny halfpenny a-piece-

X. (significantly) There are pains and penalties

Impending-I WOMAN -And all the garhe such a quantity

As he swallow'd-

B (delivers this speech with Herculean dignity, after his fashion, having hitherto remained silent upon the same principle)

Woman, you're beside yourself.

You talk you know not what-2 Woman No, no! you reckon'd

I should not know you again with them there buskins 1

1 WOMAN -Good lack ! and there was all that fish besides

Indeed-with the pickle, and all-and the good green

That he gorged at once, with the rind, and the rush baskets.

And then, when I call'd for payment, he look'd fierce, And stared at me in the face, and grinn'd, and roar'd-

X. Just like him! That's the way wherever he goes

l Woman -And snatch'd his sword 2 out, and behaved like mad.

Buskins were peculiar to Bacchus the woman mistaking him for Hercules considers them as an attempt at disguise
 In allusion to Europides's description of Hercules. Schol.

X. Poor souls! you suffer'd sadly! 1

Yes. indeed; 1 Woman And then we both ran off with the fright and terror, And scrambled into the loft beneath the roof,

And he took up two rugs and stole them off.

X. Just like him again—but something must be done

Go call me Cleon, he's my advocate 2 Woman And Hyperbolus, if you meet him send him here

He's mine, and we'll demolish him, I warrant.

1 Woman (going close up to BACCHUS in the true termagant attitude of rage and defiance, with the arms akimbo, and a neck and chin thrust out)

How I should like to strike those ugly teeth out With a good big stone, you ravenous greedy villain! You gormandizing villain! that I should— Yes, that I should, your wicked ugly fangs
That have eaten up my substance, and devour'd me.

B And I could toss you into the public pit

With the malefactors' carcases, that I could, With pleasure and satisfaction, that I could

1 Woman And I should like to rip that gullet out With a reaping hook that swallow'd all my tripe, And liver and lights-but I'll fetch Cleon here, And he shall summon him He shall settle him, And have it out of him this very day

[Exeunt 1st and 2nd WOMAN.

B (in a pretended soliloguy) I love poor Xanthias dearly, that I do;

I wish I might be hang'd else

X. Yes, I know-I know your meaning-No, no more of that,

I won't act Hercules-

Now pray, don't say so, My little Xanthias.

How should I be Hercules?

X inflames the women's wrath by judicious commiseration.
 Turbulent orators and public accusers (often mentioned by Aristophanes) lately dead

A mortal and a slave, a fellow like me?—1

B I know you're angry, and you've a right to be angry,

And if you beat me for it I'd not complain,
But if ever I strip you again, from this time forward,
I wish I may be utterly confounded,
With my wife, my children, and my family,
And the blear eyed Archedemus? into the bargain

X. I agree then, on that oath, and those conditions [XANTHIAS equips himself with the club and lion's skin, and BACCHUS resumes his bundles

CHORUS (addressing XANTHIAS)

Now that you revive and flourish In your old attire again,

You must rouse afresh and nourish Thoughts of an heroic strain, That exalt and raise the figure, And assume a fire and vigour, And an attitude and an Suited to the garb you wear, With a brow severely bent, Like the god you represent.

But beware,
Have a care!
If you blunder or betray
Any weakness any way,
Weakness of the heart or brain,
We shall see you once again
Trudging in the former track,
With the bundles at your back.

Xanthias (in reply to the Chorus)
Friends, I thank you for your care,
Your advice was good and fair,
Corresponding in its tone
With reflections of my own.

Alludes to what Bacchus had said, l. 657 Seems to have been a meddling foreigner, his want of claim to the character of citizen is noticed by Aristophanes and in a fragment of Eupolis

In any respect—the valy 1 shall be paid you X. Oh no 1—by no means! not to me!—by no means !

You must not mention it '-Take him to the torture. AE It had better be here, and under your own

eve 2

(To Bacchus) Come you—put down your bundles and make ready

And mind—Let me hear no lies!

I'll tell you what:

I'd advise people not to torture me, I give you notice—I'm a deity.

So mind now—you'll have nobody to blame But your own self-

Why, that I'm Bacchus, Jupiter's own son: AE.

That fellow there's a slave [Pointing to Xanthias.

AE (to Xanthias) Do ye hear?

I hear him-

A reason the more to give him a good beating, If he's immortal he need never mind it

Why should not you be beat as well as I then,

If you're immortal, as you say you are?

X. Agreed—and him, the first that you see flinching,
Or seeming to mind it at all, you may set him down
For an impostor and no real deity

AE (to XANTHIAS with warmth and cordiality)
Ah, you're a worthy gentleman, I'll be bound for't;
You're all for the truth and the proof. Come—Strip there both o' ye
X. But how can ye put us to the question fairly,

Upon equal terms?

AE (in the tone of a person proposing a convenient, agreeable arrangement) Oh, easily enough, Conveniently enough—a lash a piece, Each in your turn: you can have 'em one by one.

1 Value, the vulgar pronunciation is given.

Aeacus is represented as overpowered and won over by the profuse generosity with which Xanthias disposes of the joints and muscles of his slave.

X. That 's right. (Putting himself in an attitude to receive the blow) Now mind if ye see me flinch or swerve

AE (strikes him, but without producing any expression of pain.) I've struck X.

Not you!

Ar Why it seems as if I had not. I'll smite this other fellow (Strikes BACCHUS)

B (pretending not to feel) When will you do it?

Acacus perseveres and applies his discipline alternately to Bacchus and Xanthias, and extorts from them various involuntary exclamations of pain, which they immediately account for and justify in some ridiculous way. The passage cannot be translated literally, but an idea may be given of it (Suppose Bacohus to receive a blow, he exclaims— Oh dear! (and immediately subjoins) Companions of my youthful years.

X. (to AEACUS) Did ye hear? he made an outcry AE. What was that?

B A favourite passage from Archilochus.

(XANTHIAS receives a blow, and exclaims)

O Jupiter! (and subjoins) that on the Idaean height, and contends that he has been repeating the first line of a well known hymn.

AEACUS (at length giving the matter up)
Well, after all my pains, I'm quite at a loss
To discover which is the true, real deity
By the Holy Goddess—I'm completely puzzled,
I must take you before Proserpine and Pluto,
Being gods themselves they're likeliest to know

B Why, that 's a lucky thought. I only wish It had happen'd to occur before you beat us.

The changes of character between Bacchus and Xanthias in the preceding scenes have obviously no reference to the improvement or decline of the dramatic art, which is the main ostensible object of the comedy, but if we lock to the critical and dangerous situation of the state, at

X. That 's right. (Pulling himself in an attitude to receive the blow) Now mind if ye see me flinoh or swerve AE (strikes him, but without producing any expression of pain.) I've struck.

Not you!

AE Why it seems as if I had not. I'll smite this other fellow (Strikes BACOHUS)

B (pretending not to feel) When will you do it?

Acacus perseveres and applies his discipline alternately to Bacohus and Xanthias, and extorts from them various involuntary exclamations of pain, which they immediately account for and justify in some ridiculous way The passage cannot be translated literally, but an idea may be given of it (Suppose BACCHUS to receive a blow, he exclaims-Oh dear! (and immediately subjoins) Companions of my youthful years.

X. (to AEACUS) Did ye hear? he made an outcry What was that? Ar.

A favourite passage from Archilochus.

(XANTHIAS receives a blow, and exclaims)

O Jupiter! (and subjoins) that on the Idaean height. and contends that he has been repeating the first line of a well known hymn.

AEACUS (at length giving the matter up) Well, after all my pains, I'm quite at a loss To discover which is the true, real deity By the Holy Goddess-I'm completely puzzled, I must take you before Proserpine and Pluto. Being gods themselves they're likeliest to know Why, that's a lucky thought. I only wish It had happen'd to occur before you beat us.

The changes of character between Bacchus and Xanthias in the preceding scenes have obviously no reference to the improvement or decline of the dramatic art, which is the main ostensible object of the comedy, but if we look to the critical and dangerous situation of the state, at the period when it was produced (viz. the 3rd year of the 93rd Olympiad) and attend to the unusually vehement and earnest political remonstrances in the address of the Chorus to the audience which follows, we shall see abundant reason to conclude that some part of the action of the stage must have been intended to be understood in a political sense.

The measure, which at that time was uppermost in the minds of everybody, but which nobody would venture openly to propose, was the recall of Alcibiades from his second banishment; a subject which is brought forward in the last scene but one, and upon which Aeschylus and Euripides are made to deliver their opinions, the intention of the author being evidently in favour of Alcibiades, as he makes the favourable opinion proceed from the worthier and more manly character appear that, in the preceding scenes in the infernal regions, Xanthias is the representative of Alcibiades, and Bacchus of the Athenian people, and that the changes of character represent the changes in their political relation to each other The scene in which they are made to contend as to their ability to bear a beating without crying out, is merely a proverb dramatized and put into action like those of the French, who have made a part of the amusement to consist in guessing the proverb The solution of the enigma in this case would be πότεροι κλαυσούμεθα μείζω, which was applied to the people who, to their mutual injury, persevered in refusing to be reconciled Such was at the time this play was produced, the relative situation of Alcibiades and of the Athenian people, he was living in exile upon his own estate in Thrace, while they were struggling with difficulties from which his genius and abilities might have relieved them, the blows of fortune fell equally upon them both, and the question as to which was the greater sufferer, might be deemed as difficult of decision as it appeared to Aeacus, who, after all the discipline impartially inflicted on the contending parties, was obliged to leave it undetermined.

The original and admirable speculation of Mr Whiter upon the doctrine of the association of ideas considered as an instrument of criticism, is applicable to much higher purposes, but since it falls in our way, we may venture to employ it here. The recall of Alcibiades was considered as a measure which must place him at once at the head of the government, and be accompanied with a considerable retrenchment of the powers of the Democracy, on the other hand, it was expected by those who were favourable to the measure, that, under his conduct and management, the affairs of the Republic might be retrieved, and its ancient ascendancy reasserted—that the result would be success abroad and a Government at home partly Democratic and partly Dictatorial Now, if we were right in conjecturing that the proverb abovementioned was alluded to in the foregoing scene, we shall see that it was connected in Aristophanes's mind with those very ideas of subsequent reconciliation, joint command, and external ascendancy

διακαυνιάσαι πότεροι κλαυσουμεθα μείζω, Εξὸν σπεισαμενοις κοινη της Ελλάδος άρχειν

I do not know whether it is worth while to mention some coincidences which may be casual. The pole with which Xanthias appears, and which seems to be the emblem of his situation, and which Bacchus calls drapopov, had another name, as we learn from the argument (viz. άλλακτον), which would make it a proper emblem of the representative of Alcibiades. Xanthias is, in the first instance, degraded in consequence of being invited to banquet by Proserpine. Alcibiades's first exile was connected with a charge against him of having profaned the mysteries of Ceres and Proserpine at a banquet ludicrous song in which Bacchus justifies himself for having degraded Xanthias, is a fair burlesque representa tion of the mixture of envy and indignation which the undisguised ascendancy and the insolent debauches of Alcibiades had excited in the minds of the Athenian people, and which contributed powerfully to produce his first banishment. The continuator of Brumcy seems to have been aware of the propriety of looking for some political interpretation of these scenes, he supposes Xanthias to be a personification of the newly enfranchised slaves, but Aristophanes, as we have seen from the address of the chorus, approved of the measure, and certainly could not mean to hold out to the new citizens the possibility of their being again reduced to servitude.

As Aristophanes's humour frequently carries double, this explanation might perhaps hold good as far as Xanthias's first investiture with the lion's skin, but is wholly inapplicable to the subsequent changes.

The passages which follow may be considered as a relic and sample of the primitive satiric comedy, which, as is well known, consisted solely of songs and recitations, unaccompanied by dramatic action or dialogue. We may venture to imagine that a gradual change in the form and conduct of comedy might have taken place, nearly in this manner.

Let it be supposed that, in process of time, some species of exhibition, in dumb show, was introduced to illustrate and relieve the continued series of singing and recitation which constituted the primitive satiric comedy—we may conceive that these pantomimic actors would by degrees be emancipated from the obligation of silence—and we shall then see that, upon the ground of this emancipation, the Aristophanic, or ancient comedy (as we may be allowed to call it, in contradistinction to the primitive) might have been originally founded

When once the pantomimic actors had, by dint of gradual and permitted encroachment, established themselves in the undisputed privilege of speech, the ancient or Aristophanic comedy would in fact have received its existence, not as a declared innovation, but as an allowable improvement of the lawful primitive comedy such as it had existed in the preceding period, during which the satiric recital had been illustrated by interludes in dumb show But as the change, though in fact a most essential one, was neither acknowledged nor avowed, it would not (in the first instance at least) occasion any alteration of the established forms of the primitive comedy, or the omission of any of the various kinds of recited compositions, which had formed the sum total of the original entertainment. It would seem even reasonable, a priori, to conclude that they would be retained and accommodated to the action, and to the dialogue then, for the first time, intro-And that they were so retained, more strictly perhaps in the first instance (and in the earliest attempts of each successive poet of the ancient comedy, before an established reputation enabled him to depart from the strict observation of theatrio etiquetto), and, in process of time, less punctually, and with greater degree of latitude, hoth by individuals, and by the whole school of ancient comedy, will, I think, appear probable to those whose recollection will furnish them with immediate instances from the comedies of Aristophanes, or who, with these and some farther suggestions presented to them, may think it worth while to examine them. The epirrhema and antepirrhema being, in almost overy instance, totally unconnected with the action of the play, being addressed moreover to the audience, hy the chorus remaining alone in possession of the stage during a suspension of the dramatio action, and frequently (as in the instance immediately following) convoying important political suggestions, or strong reflections upon the vices and ahuses of the times, may, perhaps, upon a consideration of all these circumstances, he recognized without scruple, as a remnant of the recited satirio effusions of the primitive comedy It is observable that the epirrhema and antepirrhema are occasionally repeated more than once in the same play, a orrcumstance which ought not to he overlooked, in any attempt which may he made to form an idea of the primitive satirio comedy, hy reconstructing it from the vestiges which are discoverable in the Aristophanic comedy The parahasis, which was likewise recited by the chorus alone and unaccompanied by the dramatic performers, will naturally he referred to the same origin It seems to have heen frequently omitted in Aristophanic comedy, and is generally introduced with some apology on the part of the chorus, for ohtruding themselves on the attention of the audience, and for detaining them with (the common topic of a parabasis) an encomium or vindication of the author In the present play it is omitted, unless the sem-chorus, p 293, 'Keep silence', &c, should be considered a very diminutive and imperfect specimen. We have then the parahasis, together with the epirrhema and antepirrhema, the two last (as was before observed) repeated more than once. and these (as we have seen) were recited by the chorus remaining in exclusive possession of the stage, these, therefore, as far as they go, may serve to give us an idea of the primitive comedy but in order to furnish an entertainment of any tolerable length, it will be necessary to detect other portions of it, which, having been accommodated to, and incorporated with, the dramatic action, appear at present in a form which renders it less easy to recognize and reclaim thom Among these I should venture to place the βησις μακρά or long satirio narrative in iambics; considering, that narrative either real or fictitious is the most obvious of all the forms of satirie composition, I cannot but imagine that it must have existed even in the most early forms of satiric coincdy, though not always retained in the plays of Aristophanes, it seems, whenever it was admitted, to have been considered as a regular feature of the play, and a subject for separate criticism or commendation. In the two earliest plays of Aristophanes (in which he may be supposed to have adhered most scrupulously to the established formalities of the theatre) the bhous, or narrative, occupies a very distinguished place, and is addressed to the chorus by a single actor who is (be it observed) alone in possession of tho stage All these circumstances, together with the existence of the long bhois, or narrative, in the tragic dramas, as a piece of composition much laboured and attended to, seem to point to the same conclusion, and to indicate, that the origin of these compositions is derived from the earliest institutions of tragedy and comedy, and from the primitive form of each of them, anterior to the introduction of dramatic dialogue 1 I say dramatic dialogue, for a form of dialogue not properly dramatic seems to have existed in the primitive comedy, and to have maintained its place in the ancient or Aristophanic comedy, in which it is still discernible The two long argumentative dialogues, the one in tetrameter lambics, in which the advantage is given to the meaner character and the baser opinion, and the other in anapaests, in which the superior character is represented as asserting a higher principle, these two dialogues occurring in almost all the plays of Aristophanes, are indeed usually connected with the dramatic action, but they do not tend in any

¹ See, for instance, the two dialogues between Aeschylus and

Euripides, which follow, pp 326 and 330
In the present instance it is not unhappily connected with the action of the play-but it is in fact a mere controversy as to the comparative merits of the earlier and later school of tragic poetry degree to advance it, not at least in any degree proportionate to the space which they occupy, or to the attention which appears to have been bestowed upon them-they serve merely to exhibit a sharp encounter of wits upon a given controversial topio, and, if detached from the play, might be fairly considered a mere satirio dialogue. If, therefore, we separate from the Aristophanic comedy, the two forms of satirio dialogue above mentioned, together with the bhois makea (or long satirio narrative) the parabasis (or address of the chorus to the audience on behalf of the author), and finally the epirrhema and antepurrhema (repeated, as was before observed, sometimes more than once in the course of the same piece), and if we add to these a number of saturcal songs and lampoons. we shall be able to form to ourselves an idea, not wholly madequate, of the form and nature of the primitive satirio comedy unaccompanied by dramatic action, if, again, we suppose (as was before suggested) that this series of songs and recitations and satirio dialogue and narrative was relieved at intervals by a pantomimic ropresentation in dumb show, we shall have arrived upon the very confines of the Aristophanio comedy, where, in order to pass the boundary, nothing would be wanting but to remove the barrier which restrained the pantomimio actor from the privilege of speech.

It may be worth while to point out a singular coincidence arising out of the suppositions before mentioned. The number of the actors by which each comedy was performed was by law and custom limited to three, this law or custom might have been occasionally transgressed. but the regulation which excluded a fourth actor was generally adhered to as conformable to authority and precedent, which, in matters of religious institution (for such these comedies were considered, being a portion of the ceremonies connected with the Bacchie worship), were not to be rashly or unnecessarily violated

Now, if we suppose this precedent to have originated from the practice of the primitive comedy, and assume at the same time the suppositions respecting its form and substance, which have been before stated, we shall see that, in addition to the chorus, it admitted of three actors who were entitled to the privilege of speechnamely, the reciter of the long bhois, or satire narrative.

and the two disputants in the controversial dialogues. As it would be difficult to account for this restriction from the general principles of dramatic art, we must, I apprehend, be content to attribute it to a precedent derived from the most ancient practice of the primitive comedy. It seems that the excessive number of actors had grown into what was considered to be an abuse; but when abuses are to be reformed, the regulations which restrain them are generally established upon the authority of the earliest examples, which, as we have seen, would not have admitted of more than three actors in addition to the chorus

We have, therefore, as remnants of the primitive satiric comedy, independent of dramatic or pantomimic action—

The parabasis,

The saturic songs and lampoons, The epirrhema and antepirrhema,

The long narrative,

The dialogue in tetrameter lambics,

Another, on the same subject, in anapaests, The epirrhema and antepirrhema repeated,

Finally, a conclusion, probably not much unlike that of the Acharmans or the Peace, the tone of which seems borrowed from a more primitive, jovial, rustic style.

After the introduction of pantomime, a second narrative seems to have been introduced, explanatory and prefatory to the action which was to follow. This, too, appears to have preserved its place in the Aristophanic comedy, and is to be found in most of the plays, as Knights, 1. 40, Wasps, 1. 85, Peace, 1 50, in all of which (it is to be observed) it is addressed by the speaker directly to the audience

The vehemence of the remonstrance conveyed in the following composition has been already noticed (p 310). For the state of things which gave rise to it, the reader must again be referred to a description of the critical and disgraceful condition of Athens at that period (the 3rd year of the 93rd Olympiad). Mr Mitford has described it with his usual force and accuracy.

It is observable that, in most of the plays of Aristophanes, there appears a sort of falling off in the antepirrhema, as if the poet were, or affected to be, apprehensive of having ventured too far in the preceding opirrhema. In this instance, the same warmth and energy is sustained throughout, but still with a slight distinction of character between the two—In the epirrhema, the chorus beging gravely and authoritatively—In the antepirrhema they resume the same subject, with a fanciful comparison

The opirrhema and antepirrhema are (here, as elsowhere) preceded by a short personal lampoon, which has no obvious connexion with the action of the drama a circuinstance which, in addition to others already indicated, serves to mark the connexion between the primitive and the Aristo-

phanic comedy

CHORUS.

Muse, attend our solemn summons And survey the assembled commons, Congregated as they sit, An enormous mass of wit, -Full of genius, taste, and fire, Jealous pride, and critic ire-Cleophon 1 among the rest (Like the swallow from her nest, A familiar foreign bird), Chatters loud and will be heard (With the accent and the grace Which he brought with him from Thrace): But we fear the tuneful strain Will be turn'd to grief and pain, He must sing a dirge perforce When his trial takes its course, We shall hear him moan and wail. Like the plaintive nightingale.

¹ Cleophon, one of the chief demagogues in the then ruined and degraded democracy His mother was a Thracian, and Plato (the comic writer) had introduced her speaking in a broken jargon. He was put to death in a popular tumuit.

EPIRRHEMA.1

It behoves the sacred Chorus, and of right to them belongs,

To suggest the best advice in their addresses and their songs.

In performance of our office, we present with all humility

A proposal for removing groundless fears and dis-

abılıtv

First that all that were inveigled into Phrynichus's 2 treason,

Should be suffer'd and received by rules of evidence and reason

To clear their conduct—Secondly, that none of our Athenian race

Should live suspected and subjected to loss of franchise and disgrace,

Feeling it a grievous scandal when a single naval fight 3

Renders foreigners and slaves partakers of the city's right:

-Not that we condemn the measure, we conceived it wisely done.

As a just and timely measure, and the first and only one: -But your kinsmen and your comrades, those with whom you fought and bore

Danger, hardship, and fatigue, or with their fathers long before.

Struggling on the land and ocean, labouring with the spear and oar,

These we think, as they profess repentance for their past behaviour.

Might, by your exalted wisdoms, be received to grace and favour.

Better it would be, believe us, casting off revenge and pride,

¹ Metre, long trochaics, 'As near Porto Bello'.
2 Phrynichus See Mitford, ch 19, sect 5 and 7.
3 See p 284, l 223, and note 1

To receive as friends and kinsmen all that combat on our side

Into full and equal franchise on the other hand we fear.

your hearts are fill'd with fancies, haughty. captious, and severe

While the shock of instant danger threatens shipwreck to the state.

Such resolves will be lamented and repented of too late.

If the Muse foresees at all What in future will befall Dirty Cleigenes the small-He, the sovereign of the bath. Will not long escape from seath. But must perish by and by, With his potash and his lve. With his realm and dynasty, His terraqueous scouring ball, And his washes, one and all. Therefore he can never cease To declaim against a peace 1

ANTEPIRRHEMA.

Often times have we reflected on a similar abuse. In the choice of men for office, and of coins for common use, 1

For your old and standard pieces, valued, and approved, and tried,

Here among the Grecian nations, and in all the world beside.

Recognized in every realm for trusty stamp and pure

Are rejected and abandon'd for the trash of vester dav.

1 Parody from a tragic chorus predicting the downfall of some reigning family Cleigenes, one of the obscure demagogues of the time, not mentioned by the Scholast.

In the exhaustion of their resources, the Athenians had recourse to a debased currency—of course the good coin disappeared

For a vile, adulterate issue, drossy, counterfeit, and base.

Which the traffic of the city passes current in their place !

And the men that stood for office, noted for acknowledged worth.

And for manly deeds of honour, and for honourable birth.

Train'd in exercise and art, in sacred dances and in song,

All are ousted and supplanted by a base ignoble throng,

Paltry stamp and vulgar mettle raise them to command and place,

Brazen counterfeit pretenders, scoundrels of a scoundrel race:

Whom the state in former ages scarce would have allow'd to stand.

At the sacrifice of outcasts, as the scape-goats of the land.1

-Time it is—and long has been, renouncing all your follies past,

To recur to sterling merit and intrinsic worth at

-If we rise, we rise with honour; if we fall, it must be so!

-But there was an ancient saying, which we all have heard and know.

That the wise, in dangerous cases, have esteem'd it safe and good

To receive a slight chastisement from a wand of noble wood 2

1 The human scapegoat, the last unbloody remnant of human sacrifice ee.' The English proverb says, 'It is best to be hanged on a good ee.' The English proverb says.—

'A bludgeon stands for death and blood,

'But a wand of worthy wood

Chastises children for their good'

The measure suggested is the recall of Alcibiades, whose ascendancy would be less disgraceful than that of its existing ruler.

Scene. XANTHIAS and AEACUS

When two persons, perfectly strangers, are thrown together in a situation which makes it advisable for them to commence an immediate intimacy, they commonly begin by discovering a marvellous coincidence of taste and indgement upon all ourrent topics This observation, which is not wholly superfluous here, appears to have been so far trite and hackneyed in the time of Aristophanes as to allow of its being exemplified in a piece of very brief burlesque Xanthus and Acaous are the strangers. they discover immediately an uniformity of feeling and sentiment upon the topics most familiar to them as slaves. and conclude by a sudden pledge of friendship It is to be observed that, in the dialogue which follows, Acaous never departs from the high ground of superiority in point of local information. All his answers have a slight tinge of irony, as if he was saying—'Yes—much you

By Jupiter 1 but he's a gentleman.

That master of yours. A gentleman! To be sure he is. Why, he does nothing else but wench and drink

AR. His never striking you when you took his name-

Ontfacing him and contradicting him !-X. It might have been worse for him if he had. AE. Well, that 's well spoken, like a true bred slave.

It's just the sort of language I delight in.

X. You love exouses?

Yes. but I prefer Ar.

Cursing my master quietly in private.

X. Mischief you're fond of? Very fond indeed. X. What think ye of muttering as you leave tho room After a beating?

AE. Why, that's pleasant too X. By Jove, is it! But listening at the door ABISTOPHANES

To hear their secrets?

AE Oh, there's nothing like it.

X. And then the reporting them in the neighbourhood.

AE That's beyond everything—That's quite ecstatic

X Well, give me your hand And, there, take mine—and buss me

And there again—and now for Jupiter's sake '— (For he's the patron of our cuffs and beatings) Do tell me what's that noise of people quarrelling And abusing one another there within?

AE Aeschylus and Euripides, only 11

X. Heh?—?—?

AE Why, there's a desperate business has broke out

Among these here dead people,—quite a tumult.

X As how?

AE First, there's a custom we have establish'd In favour of professors of the arts When any one, the first in his own line, Comes down amongst us here, he stands entitled To privilege and precedence, with a seat 2 At Pluto's royal board.

X I understand you.

AE So he maintains it, till there comes a better Of the same sort, and then resigns it up

X But why should Aeschylus be disturb'd at this?

AE He held the seat for tragedy, as the master In that profession

X Well, and who's there now?

AE He kept it till Euripides appear'd, But he collected audiences about him, And flourish'd, and exhibited, and harangued Before the thieves, and housebreakers, and rogues, Cut-purses, cheats, and vagabonds, and villains,

¹ As if he said, 'It 's what we're used to—you're a new comer'
2 A seat at the public table in the Prytaneum was the reward of superior merit and services in Athens

That make the mass of population there, (pointing to the audience.) 1

And they-being quite transported, and delighted With his equivocations and evasions. His subtleties and niceties and quibbles-In short—they raised an uproar, and declared him Arch poet, by a general acclamation.

And he with this grew proud and confident,

And laid a claim to the seat where Aeschylus sat, X. And did not he get pelted for his pains?

AB. (with the dry concise importance of superior local information)

Why, no-The mob call'd out, and it was carried. To have a public trial of skill between them

You mean the mob of scoundrels that you mention'd ?

Scoundrels indeed! Aye, scoundrels without number

X. But Aeschylus must have had good friends and hearty?

Yes, but good men are scarce both here and elsewhere.

X. Well, what has Pluto settled to be done? AE. To have an examination and a trial

In public

But how comes it ?-Sophocles 2 ?-Why does not he put forth his claim amongst them ? AE. No, no !—He 's not the kind of man-not he ! I tell ye, the first moment that he came, He went up to Aeschylus and saluted him And kiss'd his cheek and took his hand quite kindly. And Aeschylus edged a little from his scat To give him room, so now the story goes (At least I had it from Cleidemides'), He means to attend there as a stander by. Proposing to take up the conqueror.

3 Cleidemides, the favourite actor of Sophocles

¹ For a similar compliment to the audience, see p 289, L 362 2 See p 277, L 92 Sophocles was noted for a mild easy character

If Aeschylus gets the better, well and good, He gives up his pretensions—but if not,
He'll stand a trial, he says, against Euripides.
X. There'll be strange doings.

That there will—and shortly —Here—in this place—strange things, I promise you; A kind of thing that no man could have thought of; Why, you'll see poetry weigh'd out and measured

X. What, will they bring their tragedies to the steel-yards ? 1

AE Yes, will they—with their rules and compasses They'll measure, and examine, and compare, And bring their plummets, and their lines and levels, To take the bearings—for Euripides

Says that he'll make a survey, word by word X. Aeschylus takes the thing to heart, I doubt AE He bent his brows and pored upon the ground;

I saw him.

Well, but who decides the business? AE Why, there the difficulty lies-for judges, True learned judges, are grown scarce, and Aeschylus Objected to the Athenians absolutely

X. Considering them as rogues and villains mostly.2

AE As being ignorant and empty generally, And in their judgement of the stage particularly In fine, they've fix'd upon that master of yours, As having had some practice in the business. But we must wait within—for when our masters Are warm and eager, stripes and blows ensue.

CHORUS

The full-mouth'd master of the tragic choir, We shall behold him foam with rage and ire; -Confronting in the list His eager, shrewd, sharp-tooth'd antagonist.

1 902.

¹ In one of the latter scenes of this play, the two poets put single verses into the opposite scales of a balance
- Consequently belonging to the faction before mentioned,

Then will his visual orbs be wildly whirl'd And hugh invectives will be hurl'd. Superb and supercilious,

Atrocious, atrabilious,

With furious gesture and with lips of foam. And hon crest unconscious of the comb. Erect with rage—his brow's impending gloom O'ershadowing his dark eyes' terrific blaze The opponent, dexterous and wary,

Will fend and parry

While masses of conglomerated phrase, Enormous, ponderous, and pedantic. With indignation frantic, And strength and force gigantic.

Are desperately sped At his devoted head-

Then in different style The touchstone and the file. And subtleties of art In turn will play their part, Analysis and rule, And every modern tool, With critic scratch and scribble. And nice invidious nibble, Contending for the important choice, A vast expenditure of human voice!

Scene. EURIPIDES, BACCHUS, AESCHYLUS

Eu Don't give me your advice, I claim the seat As being the better and superior artist.

B What, Aeschylus, don't you speak? you hear his language.

Eu He's mustering up a grand commanding visage -A silent attitude-the common trick That he begins with in his tragedies.1

B Come, have a care, my friend-You'll say too much.

I know the man of old-I've scrutinized And shown him long ago for what he is.

1 See page 329 The instances of Niobe and Achilles.

A rude unbridled tongue, a haughty spirit; Proud, arrogant, and insolently pompous;
Rough, clownish, boisterous, and overbearing.
Als Say'st thou me so? Thou bastard of the

With thy patch'd robes and rags of sentiment Raked from the streets and stitch'd and tack'd together! Thou mumping, whining, beggarly hypocrite! But you shall pay for it

B. (in addressing Aeschylus attempts to speak in more elecated style) There now, Aeschylus,

You grow too warm Restrain your ireful mood ALS Yes, but I'll seize that sturdy beggar first, And search and strip him bare of his pretensions

B Quick! Quick! A sacrifice to the winds-Make ready;

The storm of rage is gathering Bring a victim ²
Ass —A wretch that has corrupted everything;
Our music with his melodies from Crete,
Our morals with incestuous tragedies ³

B Dear, worthy Aeschylus, contain yourself, And as for you, Euripides, move off This instant, if you're wise, I give you warning Or else, with one of his big thumping phrases You'll get your brains dash'd out, and all your notions And sentiments and matter mash'd to pieces -And thee, most noble Aeschylus (as above), I beseerh With mild demeanour calm and affable To hear and answer -For it ill beseems Illustrious bards to scold like market-women. But you roar out and bellow like a furnace Eu. (in the tone of a town-blackguard working himself up for a quarrel') I'm up to it I'm resolv'd, and here I stand

¹ Aeschylus was of a resolute, uncompromising character, proud of his ancient descent, of his own valour and that of his family Euripides' mother was of a very low caste See 1 1182 2 Bacchus does not call for a sacrifice It is his buffoonish way of saying that Aeschylus is going to be in a stormy passion
3 The stories of Phaedra and Canace

Ready and steady—take what course you will, Let him be first to speak, or else let me I'll match my plots and characters against him, My sentiments and language, and what not Aye! and my music too, my Meleager, My Acolus and my Telephus and all

B Well, Aeschylus,—determine What say you? AES (speaks in a tone of grave manly despondency) I wish the place of trial had been elsewhere.

I stand at disadvantage here

As how?

AES Because my poems hve on earth above. And his died with him, and descended here. And are at hand as ready witnesses,

But you decide the matter I submit.

B (with official periness and importance)
Come—let them bring me fire and frankincense,
That I may offer vows and make oblations For an ingenious critical conclusion To this same elegant and clever trial-(To the Chorus) And you too,—sing me a hymn there -To the Muses

CHORUS

To the Heavenly Nine we petition,¹ Ye, that on earth or in air are for ever kindly pro tecting the vagaries of learned ambition.

And at your ease from above our sense and folly directing,

(or poetical contests inspecting,

Deign to behold for a while as a scene of amusing attention.

all the struggles of style and invention.)

Aid, and assist, and attend, and afford to the furious authors your refined and enlighten'd suggestions,

¹ An attempt is here made to give some idea of the metre of the original, a mixture of the anapaest and hexameter

Well, I will;

Grant them ability—force and agility, quick recollections,

and address in their answers and questions,

Pithy replies, with a word to the wise, and pulling and hauling,

with mordinate uproar and bawling,

Driving and drawing, like carpenters sawing, their dramas asunder:

With suspended sense and wonder,

All are waiting and attending On the conflict now depending!

B Come, say your prayers, you two before the trial. [Aeschylus offers incense.

AES O Ceres, nourisher of my soul, maintain me A worthy follower of thy mysteries 1

B. (to Euripides) There, you there, make your offering

Eu.
But I direct myself to other deities

B Heh, what? Your own? some new ones?
Eu. Most assuredly!

B. Well! Pray away, then—to your own new deities [Euripides offers incense

Eu. Thou foodful Air, the nurse of all my notions; And ye, the organic powers of sense and speech, And keen refined olfactory discernment, Assist my present search for faults and errors.

CHORUS

Here beside you, here are we, Eager all to hear and see
This abstruse and mighty battle
Of profound and learned prattle.

But, as it appears to me,
Thus the course of it will be;
He, the junior and appellant,
Will advance as the assailant.

¹ The first idea of tragedy was derived from the scenic exhibitions in the mysteries of Ceres, where they formed a part of the initiatory rites

Aiming shrowd satirio darts At his rival's noble parts, And with sallies sharp and keen Try to wound him in the spleen, While the veteran rends and raises Rifted, rough, uprooted phrases, Wielded like a threshing staff Scattering the dust and chaff

The metre which follows is so essentially vulgar, that I am not able to recollect any line of it in English which is fit to be quoted.1

Come, now begin, dispute away, but first I give you notice

That every phrase in your discourse must be refined, avoiding

Vulgar absurd comparisons, and awkward silly joking Eu At the first outset, I forbear to state my own pretensions.

Hereafter I shall mention them, , when his have been refuted.

After I shall have fairly shown, how he befool'd and oheated

The rustic audience that he found, which Phrynichus 2 bequeathed him.

He planted first upon the stage a figure veil'd and muffled.

An Achilles or a Niobe, that never show'd their faces. But kept a tragic attitude, without a word to utter B No more they did 'tis very true.

-In the meanwhile the Chorus Eπ Strung on ten strophes right-an end, but they remain'd in silence

I liked that silence well enough, as well, perhaps, or better

Than those new talking characters-

Eu That's from your want of judgement, Believe me.

1 See, however, The Knights, page 100, note after line 444.

The earliest tragic poet whose dramas were in any degree esteemed among the ancients.

B. Why, perhaps it is, but what was his intention? Eu. Why, mere conceit and insolence; to keep the people waiting

Till Niobe should deign to speak, to drive his drama forward.

B O what a rascal Now I see the tricks he used to play me

[To Aeschylus, who is showing signs of indignation by various contortions

-What makes you writhe and wince about?-

Because he feels my censures. Eπ -Then having dragg'd and drawl'd along, half-way to the conclusion.

He foisted in a dozen words of noisy boisterous accent.

With lofty plumes and shaggy brows, mere bugbears of the language,

That no man ever heard before -

Alas! alas!

B (to AESCHYLUS) Have done there!

Eu. He never used a simple word.

B (to AESCHYLUS) Don't grind your teeth so strangely
Eu But Bulwarks and Scamanders 'and 'Hippo-

grifs and Gorgons'

'On burnish'd shields emboss'd in brass', bloody, remorseless phrases

Which nobody could understand.

Well, I confess, for my part, В I used to keep awake at night, with guesses and con-1ectures

To think what kind of foreign bird he meant by griffin-horses

AES A figure on the heads of ships, you goose, you must have seen them

B Well, from the likeness, I declare, I took it for Eruxis 1

1 The Scholast informs us that he was eminent for ugliness

Eu So! Figures from the heads of ships are fit for tragic diction

AES Well then-thou paltry wretch, explain. What were your own devices?

Not stories about flying stags, like yours. and griffin horses,

Nor terms nor images derived from tapestry Persian hangings.

When I received the Muse from you I found her puff'd and pamper'd 1

With pompous sentences and terms, a cumbrous huge

virago

My first attention was applied to make her look

genteelly,
And bring her to a slighter shape by dint of lighter diet
I fed her with plain household phrase, and cool familiar salad.

With water gruel episode, with sentimental jelly, With moral mincement, till at length I brought her into compass,

Cephisophon, who was my cook, contrived to make them relish. I kept my plots distinct and clear, and, to prevent confusion,

My leading characters rehearsed their pedigrees for prologues.

"Twas well, at least, that you forbore to quote your own extraction.

Ev From the first opening of the scene, all persons were in action.

The master spoke, the slave replied, the women, young and old ones,

All had their equal share of talk—

As Come, then, stand forth and tell us, What forfeit less than death is due for such an innovation?

Eu I did it upon principle, from democratic motives

¹ Euripides speaks in the style of the basest of all occupations, the speculator in female slaves—the lone of Terence

B.1 Take care, my friend—upon that ground your footing is but ticklish

Ev. I taught these youths to speechify.

AES I say so too —Moreover

I say that—for the public good—you ought to have been hang'd first

Eu The rules and forms of rhetoric,—the laws of composition.

To prate—to state—and in debate to meet a question fairly.

At a dead lift to turn and shift—to make a nice distinction.

I grant it all—I make it all—my ground of accusation.

Eu. The whole in cases and concerns occurring and recurring

At every turn and every day domestic and familiar, So that the audience, one and all, from personal experience,

Were competent to judge the piece, and form a fair opinion

Whether my scenes and sentiments agreed with truth and nature

I never took them by surprise to storm their understandings.

With Memnons and Tydides's and idle rattle-trappings

Of battle-steeds and clattering shields to scare them from their senses.

But for a test (perhaps the best) our pupils and adherents

May be distinguish'd instantly by person and behaviour;

His are Phormisius the rough, Meganetes the gloomy,2

1 The philosophic sect to which Euripides belonged, were known to be hostile to the democracy

2 Of these personages the Scholiast tells us that Phormisus wore a long beard, and affected to be formidable, and that Meganetes was a bold, rough soldier,—for Theramenes, see p 302, for his past conduct, see Mr. Mitford, ch. 19, sect 7, and ch 20, sect 3, and for his subsequent, sect. 5

Hobgoblin headed, trumpet-mouth'd, grim-visaged, ugly bearded,

But mine are Cleitophon the smooth,—Theramenes the gentle

B Theramenes—a olever hand, a universal genius, I never found him at a loss in all the turns of party To change his watchword at a word or at a moment's Eu Thus it was that I began. [warning

Eu Thus it was that I began,
With a nicer, neater plan,
Teaching men to look about,
Both within doors and without,
To direct their own affairs,
And their house and household wares,
Marking everything amiss—
'Where is that? and—What is this?
'This is broken—that is gone,'
'Tis the modern style and tone!

B. Yes by Love—and at their homes

'Tis the modern style and tone 1
B Yes, by Jove—and at their homes
Nowadays each master comes,
Of a sudden bolting in
With an uproar and a din,
Rating all the servants round,
'If it's lost, it must be found.
Why was all the garlic wasted?
There, that honey has been tasted
And these clives pilfer'd here
Where's the pot we bought last year?
What's become of all the fish?
Which of you has broke the dish?'
Thus it is, but heretofore,
The moment that they cross'd the door,
They sat them down to doze and snore

CHORUS

^{&#}x27;Noble Achilles! you see the disaster,
'The shame and affront, and an enemy nigh!'

¹ General distress had produced a stricter economy, which is here humorously attributed to the precepts of Euripides.
² From Aeschylus's tragedy of The Myrmidons, which opened with the death of Patroclus and the defeat of the Greeks.

Oh! bethink thee, mighty master, Think betimes of your reply, Yet beware, lest anger force Your hasty chariot from the course; Grievous charges have been heard, With many a sharp and bitter word, Notwithstanding, mighty chief, Let Prudence fold her cautious reef In your anger's swelling sail, By degrees you may prevail, But beware of your behaviour Till the wind is in your favour: Now for your answer, illustrious architect, Founder of lofty theatrical lays! Patron in chief of our tragical trumperies! Open the floodgate of figure and phrase!

AES My spirit is kindled with anger and shame, To so base a competitor forced to reply, But I needs must retort, or the wretch will report That he left me refuted and foil'd in debate, Tell me then, What are the principal merits Entitling a poet to praise and renown?

Eu The improvement of morals, the progress of mınd,

When a poet, by skill and invention, Can render his audience virtuous and wise

AES But if you, by neglect or intention, Have done the reverse, and from brave honest spirits Depraved, and have left them degraded and base, Tell me, what punishment ought you to suffer?

B Death, to be sure '—Take that answer from me AES. Observe then, and mark, what our citizens

When first from my care they were trusted to you, Not scoundrel informers, or paltry buffoons, Evading the services due to the state, But with hearts all on fire, for adventure and war, Distinguish'd for hardiness, stature, and strength, Breathing forth nothing but lances and darts,

Arms, and equipment, and battle array, Bucklers, and shields, and habergeons, and hauberks Helmets, and plumes, and heroic attire.

B There he goes, hammering on with his helmets,

He'll be the death of me one of these days !

Eu But how did you manage to make 'em so manly.

What was the method, the means that you took?

Speak, Aeschylus, speak, and behave yourself

And don't in your rage stand so silent and stern AES A drama, brimful with heroical spirit

Ev What did you call it?

'The Chiefs against Thebes.' That inspired each spectator with martial ambition. Courage, and ardour, and provess, and pride

B But you did very wrong to encourage the

Thebans

Indeed, you deserve to be punish'd, you do, For the Thebans are grown to be capital soldiers, You've done us a miscluef by that very thing

Ars The fault was your own, if you took other courses

The lesson I taught was directed to you Then I gave you the glorious theme of 'the Persians', Replete with sublime patriotical strains, The record and example of noble achievement, The delight of the city, the pride of the stage "

B I rejoiced, I confess, when the tidings were carried

To old King Darius, so long dead and buried. And the chorus in concert kept wringing their hands. Weeping and wailing, and crying Alas!

Als Such is the duty, the task of a poet,

Fulfilling in honour his office and trust.

1 The phrase of a person complaining of a noisy trade—an armourer's shop next door

2 In this play the ancient Persian councillors evoke the ghost of Darius, and relate to him the calamitous result of his son's expedition against Greece.

Look to traditional history—look To antiquity, primitive, early, remote: See there, what a blessing illustrious poets Conferr'd on mankind, in the centuries past, Orpheus instructed mankind in religion, Reclaim'd them from bloodshed and barbarous rites: Musaeus deliver'd the doctrine of medicine, And warnings prophetic for ages to come: Next came old Hesiod, teaching us husbandry, Ploughing, and sowing, and rural affairs, Rural economy, rural astronomy, Homely morality, labour, and thrift: Homer himself, our adorable Homer, What was his title to praise and renown? What, but the worth of the lessons he taught us, Discipline, arms, and equipment of war?

B. Yes, but Pantacles was never the wiser; For in the procession he ought to have led, When his helmet was tied, he kept puzzling, and tried To fasten the crest on the crown of his head.

AES But other brave warriors and noble commanders

Were train'd in his lessons to valour and skill; Such was the noble heroical Lamachus, ² Others besides were instructed by him; And I, from his fragments ordaining a banquet, Furnish'd and deck'd with majestical phrase, Brought forward the models of ancient achievement, Teucer, Patroclus, and chiefs of antiquity, Raising and rousing Athenian hearts, When the signal of onset was blown in their ear, With a similar ardour to dare and to do; But I never allow'd of your lewd Sthenoboeas, Or filthy, detestable Phaedras—not I—

1 Of Pantacles nothing is known but that he was laughed at for his awkwardness by the comic poets, probably an absent man, not a usual character among the Athenians

Lamachus, killed at Syracuse In the Ach, p 32, as a promoter of the war he is ridiculed, but without contempt, spoken of in the Thesm with respect, and in the Peace with an evidently kind intention

Indeed, I should doubt if my drama throughout Exhibit an instance of woman in love

Eu No, you were too stern for an amorous turn,

For Venus and Cupid too stern and too stupid.

AES. May they leave me at rest, and with peace in my breast.

And infest and pursue your kindred and you,

With the very same blow that dispatch'd you below 1 B That was well enough said, with the life that he led.

He himself in the end got a wound from a friend. Eu But what, after all, is the horrible mischief? My poor Sthenoboeas, what harm have they done?

AES The example is follow'd, the practice has gam'd.

And women of family, fortune, and worth, Bewilder'd with shame in a passionate fury, Have poison'd themselves for Bederophon's sake 2 Eu But at least you'll allow that I never invented 1t.

Phaedra's affair was a matter of fact. AES. A fact, with a vengeance! but horrible facts Should be buried in silence, not bruited abroad, Nor brought forth on the stage, nor emblazon'd in poetry Children and boys have a teacher assign'd them— The bard is a master for manhood and youth, Bound to instruct them in virtue and truth, Beholden and bound.

But is virtue a sound? $\mathbf{E}\mathbf{\sigma}$

Can any mysterious virtue be found In bombastical, huge, hyperbolical phrase?

Thou dirty, calamitous wretch, recollect That oxalted ideas of fancy require To be olothed in a suitable vesture of phraso.

1 Euripides's death is said to have been hastened by his wife's misconduct.

³ In a tragedy of Euripides, now lost, Sthenoboea poisons her self for love of Bellerophon Probably in some cases of female suicido, this tragedy of Euripides had held the same place that the Phacdon of Plate does in the story of the death of Cate And that heroes and gods may be fairly supposed Discoursing in words of a mightier import, More lofty by far than the children of man; As the pomp of apparel assign'd to their persons, Produced on the stage and presented to view, Surpasses in dignity, splendour, and lustre Our popular garb and domestic attire, A practice which nature and reason allow, But which you disannull'd and rejected

As how? $\mathbf{E}\mathbf{\sigma}$ When you brought forth your kings, in a villainous fashion.

In patches and rags, as a claim for compassion.

Eu. And this is a grave misdemeanour, forsooth! It has taught an example of sordid untruth: For the rich of the city, that ought to equip, And to serve with, a ship, are appealing to pity, Pretending distress—with an overworn dress.

By Jove, so they do; with a waistcoat brand

Worn closely within, warm and new for the skin; And if they escape in this beggarly shape, You'll meet 'em at market, I warrant 'em all,

Buying the best at the fishmonger's stall.

AES He has taught every soul to sophisticate truth; And debauch'd all the bodies and minds of the youth; Leaving them morbid, and pallid, and spare, And the places of exercise vacant and bare -The disorder has spread to the fleet and the crew; The service is ruin'd, and ruin'd by you-With prate and debate in a mutinous state; Whereas, in my day, 'twas a different way; Nothing they said, nor knew nothing to say, But to call for their porridge, and cry, 'Pull away'. Yes—yes, they knew this,

How to stink in the teeth Of the rower beneath, And befoul their own comrades,

And pillage ashore;

But now they forget the command of the oar —

Prating and splashing, Discussing and dashing, They steer here and there, With their eyes in the air, Hither and thither,

Nobody knows whither

Can the reprobate mark in the course he has

One crime unattempted, a mischief undone? With his horrible passions, of sisters and brothers.1 And sons in law, tempted by villainous mothers. And temples defiled with a bastardly birth. And women, divested of honour or worth That talk about life 'as a death upon earth'. And sophistical frauds and rhetorical bawds. Till now the whole state is infested with tribes Of scriveners and scribblers, and rascally scribes-All practice of masculine vigour and pride, Our wrestling and running, are all laid aside. And we see that the city can hardly provide For the Feast of the Founder, a racer of force? To carry the torch and accomplish a course

B Well, I laugh'd till I cried The last festival tide. At the fellow that ran,-'Twas a heavy fat man, And he panted and hobbled, And stumbled and wabbled, And the pottery people about the gate, Seeing him hurried, and tired, and late. Stood to receive him in open rank, Helping him on with a hearty spank Over the shoulder and over the flank. The flank, the loin, the back, the shoulders. With shouts of applause from all heholders, While he ran on with a filthy fright. Puffing his link to keep it alight.

See note 3, p 326 ² See note 1, p 280

If the table of contents assigned to the primitive comedy in page 316 should be thought too scanty, we may venture to add to it all those regular debates, which are managed by two disputants acting alternately as opponent and respondent, in which the chorus appears as the moderator and generally (though in the present instance that office is assigned to Bacchus) as the judge of the controversy, the arguments on both sides, the attack, and the reply, being regularly preceded by a short exhortation from the chorus Formal disputation of this kind would be wholly out of place in comedy (such as we generally conceive it, namely, a comedy consisting of dramatic action); accordingly, no instance of the kind is to be found, I believe, in modern comedy or in what was called the new comedy of the Greeks, the remains of which have been preserved to us in the translations of Plantus and Terence should seem therefore that the frequent recurrence of this sort of disputations in the comedies of Aristophanes can hardly be accounted for in any way more probably, than by supposing them to have existed in the primitive comedy, that undramatic form, from which the ancient (as it is called) or Aristophanic form was immediately derived

We may venture therefore to enumerate, among the constituent parts of the primitive undramatic comedy, controversies upon debated points or upon a comparison of their own respective merits, in which two disputants were engaged with the chorus presiding as judge and moderator.

If this inference is not strictly logical, it may at least be allowed to be geological. The primary stratum of primitive comedy is lost—but a conjecture may be formed as to its composition by observing those substances, which, though they abound in the strata of transition, are no longer discoverable in those of more recent formation. We conclude that such substances must have formed a component part of that elder stratum which has disappeared. In the case now before us the stratum of transition is the ancient or Aristophanic comedy, forming a connecting link between the primitive undramatic comedy and the new comedy, of the Greeks (the comedy of Menander and Terence), the character of which is exclusively dramatic and in no respect different from that of modern comedy In this view of the subject the middle comedy (as it was called by the critics of antiquity) is not taken into account, it was, in fact, merely a mutilated form of the Aristophanio comedy stripped of its ohorus, of its personalities, and of its privileges of political satire-it is identified with the ancient or Aristophanic comedy by its main characteristic, the utter impossibility of the story, and upon this ground stands (equally with the ancient comedy) in direct contrast with the new comedy. in which (as in modern comedy) an adherence to the probabilities of real life is an essential requisite. ancient comedy, amidst its infinite variety of supernatural and incredible subjects, admitted burlesque representations of mythological and heroic traditions. and among the titles of his comedies that are lost, the Daedalus, the Danaids, the Lemnian Women (or the story of Jason and Hypsipyle), prove that Arist chanes, oven before the suppression of the genuine ancient comedy. did not neglect subjects of this kind Cratinus too, who died long before that period, among the scanty fragments that remain of him, has still left in, existence a single line from a comedy representing Ulysses in the cave of the Cyclops. But subjects of this kind formed the main resource of the writers of the middle comedy, and their productions of this description were much more numerons. Therefore, as the result of this digression, it may be allowable to observe, if nobody should have observed it before, that (in addition to the Plutus of Aristophanes) the Amphitryon of Plautus (undoubtedly translated from Greek) may be regarded as a specimen of the middle comedy of the Greeks, and this result, however interesting, being not much to the purpose of the present translation, we will proceed forthwith to the lines in which the Chorus perform their part in animating and encouraging the disputants.

CHORUS

Ere the prize is lost and won Mighty doings will be done Now then—(though to judge aright Is difficult, when force and might Are opposed with ready slight, When the Champion that is cast Tumbles uppermost at last) 1 -Since you meet in equal match, Argue, contradict and scratch, Scusse, and abuse and bite, Tear and fight, With all your wits and all your might. -Fear not for a want of sense Or judgement in your audience, That defect has been removed: 3 They're prodigiously improved, Disciplined, alert and smart, Drill'd and exercised in art: Each has got a little book, In the which they read and look, Doing all their best endeavour To be critical and clever. Thus their own ingenious natures, Aided and improved by learning, Will provide you with spectators Shrewd, attentive, and discerning.

The altercation which follows, turning upon a question of verbal criticism, is incapable of an exact translation. The attack with its answer occupies about forty-five lines in the original, Euripides begins it, saying that his opponent is incorrect in his use of words, and offers to prove it from those parts of his tragedies which were usually the most carefully composed (the opening speeches, or prologues as they were called)—He then calls upon Aeschylus to repeat the first lines from the tragedy of Orestes, in this tragedy Orestes is represented as having returned secretly to Argos, standing at the tomb of his father, and invoking Mercury,—not the vulgar patron of thieves and pedlars and spies, but that more awful deity, the terrestrial Hermes, the guardian of the dead,

1 An allusion to the combats of the Pancratium, in which all means of attack and defence were employed, as they are by the rival poets in the scenes which follow

Here is a little coaxing to the audience, but also a little irony I suspect that Aristophanes was no great friend to reading and writing as compared with the ancient system of memory and recitation and inspector general of the infernal regions, the care of which had been delegated to him by the paternal authority of Jupiter

The obscurity and ambiguity of the original may be represented by the following lines,

Terrestrial Hermes with supreme espial, Inspector of that old paternal realm, Aid and assist me now, your suppliant, Revisiting and returning to my country!

This is variously misinterpreted The espial is supposed to refer to the treason practised against Agamemnon. -the paternal realm to be that of Argos, and the last line is objected to as containing a tautology, -Aeschylus defends himself by the explanation of his meaning, which has been already given, and in answer to the last objection contends that for an exile to revisit his country and to return to it 's not the same thing to which Euripides replies

It is not justly express'd, since'he return'd Clandestinely without authority

That's well remark'd, but I don't comprehend

ıt.

Eu (tauntingly and coolly)

Proceed-Continue!

B (realous of his authority) Yes, you must continue. Aeschylus, I command you to continue (To EURIPIDES) And you, keep a look out and mark his blunders.

AES 'From his sepulchral mound I call my father To listen and hear'-

There's a tautology! $\mathbf{E}\mathbf{u}$

'To listen and hear'-Why, don't you see, you ruffian!

It's a dead man he's calling to-Three times 1 We call to 'em, but they can't be made to hear

AES And you your prologues, of what kind were thev?

¹ The custom at funerals of invoking the dead by name three times.

Ev. I'll show ye; and if you'll point out a tautology, Or a single word clapp'd in to botch a verse—That's all'—I'll give you leave to spit upon me

B (with an absurd air of patience and resignation)
Well, I can't help myself, I'm bound to attend.
Begin then with these same fine-spoken prologues.

Eu. 'Oedipus was at first a happy man'.

AES. Not he, by Jove —but born to misery;

Predicted and predestined by an oracle

Before his birth to murder his own father!

—Could he have been 'at first a happy man'?

Eu... 'But afterwards became a wretched mortal.'

As By no means! he continued to be wretched,
—Born wretched, and exposed as soon as born
Upon a potsherd in a winter's night,
Brought up a foundling with disabled feet;
Then married—a young man to an aged woman,
That proved to be his mother—whereupon
He tore his eyes out.

B. To complete his happiness, He ought to have served at sea with Erasinides ¹

Aeschylus then attacks Euripides for the monotony of his metre, and the continued recurrence of a pause on the fifth syllable, which he ridicules by a burlesque addition subjoined to all the verses in which this cadence is detected. The point and humour of this supplementary phrase is not explained to us by the ancient scholiasts, nor has the industry of modern commentators enabled them to detect it Euripides repeats the first lines of several of his tragedies, but falls perpetually upon the same pause, and is met at every turn with the absurd supplement, till Bacchus calls out to him—

There!—that 's enough—now come to music, can't ye?

Eu. I mean it; I shall now proceed to expose him
As a bad composer, awkward, uninventive,
Repeating the same strain perpetually—

¹ Erasinides was condemned to death with five of his colleagues in command, immediately after having obtained the naval victory at Arginusae See Mitford, ch 20, sec. 2 and 3.

Cuorus

I stand in wonder and perplext To think of what will follow next. Will he dare to criticizo The noble bard, that did devise Our oldest, boldest harmonies, Whose mighty music we revere? Much I marvel, much I fear—

Ev Mighty fine music, truly! I'll give yo a sample.

It's overy meh out out to the same pattern.

Of the part of the entertainment which followed, however amusing it might have been to the musical critics of Athens, it is impossible for a modern to form any satisfactory notion. It consisted of a musical burlesque, in which each of the rival candidates (Euripides and Aeschylus) is represented as oxhibiting a carreature of the style of his opponent. This carleature seems to have consisted of a series of musical phrases selected from their works. but as the music was the only object, while the words sorved only to indicate the music which was attached to them, the words which now remain alone (the music having shared the common fate of all the other music of the ancients) present little more than a jumble of sontences incapable of heing connected hy any continuous meaning We have seen that Aesohylus is accused of repeating the same strain perpetually-this, it should seem, was exemplified by bringing together passages from the choruses of different plays, which were marked by the recurrence of the same musical phrase. The scholiasts point out passages from the choruses of four plays, which are thus brought into juxtaposition, but the main subject of burlesque appears to have been a chorus from the tragedy of the Myrmidons (the soldiers of Achilles), in which they were represented as addressing their chief after the death of Patroclus and the discomfiture of the Greeks. We may easily suppose that the peculiarities of Acsohylus's style would be most strongly exemplified in a chorus composed of such characters.

It might have been deemed allowable, and perhaps advisable (after the explanation already given) to relinquish any attempt at representing what is so little capable of being represented; but as nature in general, and the nature of translation more particularly, abhors a vacuum, a few lines are put together in an Aeschylean metre, which may serve as a substitute to fill up the chasm, and to represent the chorus (that of the Myrmidous) which was the chief subject of this burlesque criticism. It must be left to the musical reader, if the reader should happen to be musical, to imagine to himself a noisy, boisterous accompaniment on a wind instrument. Though perhaps his imagination might be more amusingly employed in conceiving a similar scene of contest between the great musical favourities of the last and the present century, between Gluck or Handel, for instance, and Rossim.

B. I'll mark—I've pick'd these pebbles up for counters.

Eu. Noble Achilles! Forth to the rescue! Forth to the rescue with ready support! Hasten and go,
There is havoc and woe.
Hasty defeat,
And a bloody retreat,
Confusion and rout,
And the terrible shout
Of a conquering foe.

Tribulation and woe!

B Whoh hoh there! we've had woes enough, I reckon;

Therefore I'll go to wash away my woe In a warm bath

Ev No, do pray wait an instant, And let me give you first another strain, Transferr'd to the stage from music to the lyre 1

B. Proceed then—only give us no more woes. Eu. The supremacy, sceptre, and haughty command

1 Is Aeschylus censured for adapting music composed for the lyre to the accompaniment of wind instruments, which is indicated by nonsensical imitative sounds?

Of the Grecian land—with a flatto flatto flatto-thrat—And the ravenous sphinx, with her horrible brood, Thirsting for blood—with a flatto flatto flatto thrat, And armies equipp'd for a vengeful assault, For Paris's fault—with a flatto flatto flatto thrat.

B What herb is that same flatto thrat? some simple,

I guess, you met with in the field of Marathon

But such a tune as this! you must have learnt it

From fellows hauling buckets at the well 1

AES Such were the strains I purified and brought To just perfection—taught by Phrynichus, Not copying him, but culling other flowers From those fair meadows which the Muses love—But he filches and begs, adapts and borrows Snatches of tunes from ministrels in the street, Strumpets and vagabonds—the lullabys Of nurses and old women—jigs and ballads—I'll give ye a proof—Bring me a lyre here, somebody What signifies a lyre? the castanets Will suit him better—Bring the castanets, With Euripides's Muse to snap her fingers In cadence to her master's compositions.

B This Muse, I take it, is a Lesbian Muse, 3 Ars. Gentle haloyons, ye that lave

Ars. Gentle haloyons, ye that la Your snowy plume,

Sporting on the summer wave,
Ye too that around the room,
On the rafters of the roof
Strain aloft your airy woof,
Ye spiders, spiders ever spinning,
Never ending, still beginning—
Where the dolphin loves to follow,
Weltering in the surge's hollow,

¹ Music is apt to be vulgarized by continued popularity In Goldsmith's time the minuet in Ariadas had become a tune for a dancing bear The shabby old juryman in the Wasps sings Phrynichus's music. Yet Phrynichus is classed with Anacreon and Alcaeus as a great improver and master in music. Thesm. 164.

² The Lesbian women were of very bad fame

Dear to Neptune and Apollo; By the seamen understood Ominous of harm or good; In capricious, eager sallies, Chasing, racing round the galleys.

What follows is not very intelligible; it should seem that Aeschylus beats the measure of the music which he ridicules He says, 'Do you see this foot?' or (as the scholast explains it) 'this rhythm?' to which Bacchus answers, 'I see it—'

AES. Well now. Do you see this?
B. I see it—

After which Aeschylus turns to his antagonist:

Such is your music. I shall now proceed To give a specimen of your monodies 1—

The Burlesque which follows admits of a tolerably close translation.

O dreary shades of night!
What phantoms of affright
Have scared my troubled sense
With saucer eyes immense;
And huge horrific paws
With bloody claws!
Ye maidens haste, and bring
From the fair spring

A bucket of fresh water; whose clear stream May purify me from this dreadful dream:

But oh! my dream is out
Yo maidens search about!
O mighty powers of mercy, can it be;

That Glyke, Glyke, she, (My friend and civil neighbour heretofore), Has robb'd my henroest of its feather'd store?

1 Menod compersor aura by a single actor unaccompanied by the chorus. The furlesque turns upon the faults of Euripidea's style, the false sublane—the rulest pathetic; and importment artifications for divine assistance. With the dawn I was beginning, Spinning, spinning, spinning, spinning, Unconscious of the meditated crime,

Meaning to sell my yarn at market-time Now tears alone are left me, My neighbour hath bereft me, Of all-of all-all but a tear! Since he, my faithful trusty chanticleer Is flown—is flown!—is gone—is gone!
—But, O ye nymphs of sacred Ida, bring Torches and bows, with arrows on the string.

And search around

All the suspected ground And thou, fair huntress of the sky, Deign to attend, descending from on high— -While Hecate, with her tremendous torch, Even from the topmost garret to the porch Explores the premises with search exact, To find the thief and ascertain the fact— B Come, no more songs!

I've had enough of 'em . For my part, I shall bring him to the balance,
As a true test of our poetic merit,
To prove the weight of our respective verses
B Well then, so be it—if it must be so,
That I'm to stand here like a cheesemonger
Retailing poetry with a pair of scales.

[A huge pair of scales are here discovered on the stage.

CHORUS

Curious eager wits pursue Strange devices quaint and new, Like the scene you witness here, Unaccountable and queer,

¹ There is a similar invocation in the Lysistrata, where the dawding Chorus, instead of going to put out the fire, stand with buckets of water in their hands, praying to Minerva to bring more water

I myself, if merely told it, If I did not here behold it, Should have deem'd it utter folly, Craziness and nonsense wholly.

B Move up; stand close to the balance!

Ev. Here are we—

B Take hold now, and each of you repeat a verse, And don't leave go before I call to you!

Eu. We're ready

B Now, then, each repeat a verse. Ev 'I wish that Argo with her woven wings.' AES 'O streams of Sperchius, and ye pastured plains.' 2

B. Let go !—See now—this scale outweighs that other

Very considerably—

Ev. How did it happen?

B He slipp'd a river in, like the wool-jobbers, To moisten his metre—but your line was light, A thing with wings—ready to fly away

Fig. Let him try once again then, and take hold.

B Take hold once more

Eu. We're ready.

B. Now repeat E_U 'Speech is the temple and altar of persuasion's

AES 'Death is a God that loves no sacrifice''
B Let go!—See there again! This scale sinks

No wonder that it should, with Death put into it, The heaviest of all calamities

EU But I put in persuasion finely express'd

In the best terms

B Perhaps so, but persuasion
Is soft and light and silly—Think of something That's heavy and huge, to outweigh him, something solid.

¹ The first line of the Medea still existing

From the Philocetes, now lost.

From the Antigone, now lost From the Niobe, now lost

Eu Let's see—Where have I got it? Something solid?

B 'Achilles has thrown twice-Twice a deuce-

Come now, one trial more, this is the last.

Eu 'He grasp'd a mighty mace of massy weight.' 2 'Cars upon cars, and corpses heap'd pell mell's

He has nick'd you again-

Why so? What has he done? Eπ

He has heap'd ye up cars and corpses, such a load

As twenty Egyptian labourers could not carry—

AES Come, no more single lines—let him bring all. His wife, his children, his Cephisophon, His books and everything, himself to boot—

I'll counterpoise them with a couple of lines B Well, they're both friends of mine-I shan't

decido

To get myself ill will from either party, One of them seems extraordinary clever, And the other suits my taste particularly

PLUTO Won't you decide then, and conclude the business?

Suppose then I decide, what then? В

Then take him P Away with you, whichever you prefer,

As a present for your pains in coming down here

B Heaven bless ve—Well—let's see now—Can't ye advise me?

1 That is, Euripides (for Achilles) has failed twice.—In the Tdephus Euripides had represented Achilles playing at dice. This line was ridiculed by Eupolis.

From the Meleager, now lost.
From a play called Glaucus Poinicus, of which the subject,

I believe, is not known

4 The reconquest of Egypt by the Persians had driven the natives to seek subsistence with their allies at Athens. They are mentioned in the Birds as masons and artificers are mentioned in the state of t

author of some of them.

This is the case—I'm come in search of a poet—

P. With what design?

With this design; to see The City again restored to peace and wealth, Exhibiting tragedies in a proper style. -Therefore whichever gives the best advice

On public matters I shall take him with me. -First then of Alcibiades, what think ye? 1

The City is in hard labour with the question. Eu. What are her sentiments towards him?

'She loves and she detests and longs to have him.' 2 But tell me, both of you, your own opinions.

Eu. (Euripides and Aeschylus speak each in his own tragical style.) I hate the man, that in his country's service

Is slow, but ready and quick to work her harm; Unserviceable except to serve himself.

B. Well said, by Jove !-Now you-Give us a sentence.

AES. 'Tis rash and idle policy to foster A lion's whelp within the city walls, But when he's rear'd and grown you must indulge him.

B. By Jove then, I'm quite puzzled; one of them Has answer'd clearly, and the other sensibly: But give us both of ye one more opinion; What means are left of safety for the state?

Eu. To tack Kinesias Ilke a pair of wings To Cleocritus's shoulders, and dispatch them From a precipice to sail across the seas

B. It seems a joke; but there's some sense in it. Eu... Then being both equipp'd with little cruets They might co-operate in a naval action, By sprinkling vinegar in the enemies' eyes.

1 See p. 310

2 From a verse of one of the tragedies of Ion of Chios.

2 From a verse of one of the oragination of Chios.
3 See above, l. 176 He was a ridiculously slim figure, a dithyrambic poet and musician. Cleocritus appears afterwards as joined with Thrasybulus in the short civil war of the Piraeus as joined in the Rids. He is ridiculed in the Birds.

-But I can tell you and will

It Spean, and explain then-Ly If we metrist where present that is pliced, Trust og in what was bere ofore mistrusted-

B How! Whit! Im at a he see heak it again

Not quite so tearnedly—mu a plainly and simply If we will draw the confidence no placed In these our present statesmen and transfer it To those whom we mintrusted heretofore, The seems I think our fairest chance for safety

If with our present counsellors we fail Then with their oppeates no might succeed

B That a capitally said, my Palamedia 12 313 politician! was it all your own?

Your own invention?

All except the cructs, Łu That was a notion of Cephisophon's.

B (to Alacuatus) Now you-What say you? Inform me about the city-Ars.

What kind of persons has she placed in office? Does she promote the worthust?

В

No. not she.4 She can t abide 'em Rogues then she prefers? Arg

B Not altogether, she makes use of 'em Perforce as it were.

Then who can hope to save AER A state so wayward and perverse, that finds No sort of habit fitted for her wear ? Drugget or superfine, nothing will suit her! Do think a little how she can be saved

² Euripides had written a tragedy on the death of Palamedes describing him as a most wise and virtuous politician.

See note 5 in p 351 4 See p 310, the Antepurhema.

¹ Under cover of ridiculing Euripides's style, harsh and obscure where it aspires to be sententious, and presale where it is meant to be familiar, Aristophanes contrives to impress and to repeat twice the same sentiment (his own, see p 320) In the Acharmans a caricature of Euripides's harangues serves as a cover for very bold opinions.

AES Not here; when I return there, I shall speak B. No, do pray send some good advice before you. AES. When they regard their lands as enemy's ground,

Their enemy's possessions as their own, Their seamen and the fleet their only safeguard, Their sole resource hardship and poverty,

And resolute endurance in distress—

B That's well,—but juries eat up everything, And we shall lose our supper if we stay.1

P. Decide then-

You'll decide for your own selves,2 I'll make a choice according to my fancy.
Ev Remember, then, your oath to your poor friend.

And, as you swore and promised, rescue me

B. 'It was my tongue that swore' 3-I fix on Aeschylus

Ev. O wretch! what have you done?

B. Me? done? What should I?

Voted for Aeschylus to be sure-Why not?

Ev. And after such a villamous act, you dare

To view me face to face—Art not ashamed?

B. Why shame, in point of fact, is nothing real: Shame is the apprehension of a vision Reflected from the surface of opinion-

The opinion of the public—They must judge Ev. O cruel!—Will you abandon me to death?

Why perhaps death is life, and life is death, And victuals and drink an illusion of the senses: For what is Death but an eternal sleep?

treasury, and to the hurry of the comedians, poets; actors, and judges, to go to the supper which concluded the business of the day See Eccl 1 1178

Addressed by the actor to the judges of the prize.

A line in the Hippolytus which had given great offence, see p 278, 1 112—Here and in what follows, Bacchus pays Euripides by own philosophic coin vulgarized after his companies. in his own philosophic coin vulgarized after his own (Bacchus's) The intention of the author has been made clearer by a little amplification.

B (a little startled and alarmed) What for ? 1

To be received and entertain'd

With a feast before you go

B That's well imagined, With all my heart—I've not the least objection.

CHORUS.

Happy is the man possessing
The superior holy blessing
Of a judgement and a taste
Accurate, refined and chaste,
As it plainly doth appear
In the scene presented here,
Where the noble worthy Bard
Meets with a deserved reward,
Suffer'd to depart in peace
Freely with a full release,
To revisit once again
His kindred and his countrymen—
Hence moreover

You discover,
That to sit with Socrates,
In a dream of learned ease,
Quibbling, counter quibbling, prating,
Argufying and debating
With the metaphysic sect,
Daily sinking in neglect,
Growing careless, incorrect,

3 The style of the original seems to be taken from that of the moral and instructive verse intended for the improvement of children and young persons.

¹ See Peisthetairus in the Burds, when he is invited to the mansion of the Hoopoe.

It is curious to see Aristophanes's opinion as to the cause of the defects which he so frequently notices in Euripides, namely, that they arose from an indolent philosophic curiosity, and the want of a true zeal for the perfection of his art.

While the practice and the rules Of the true poetic Schools Are renounced or slighted wholly, Is a madness and a folly.

PLUTO.

Go forth with good wishes and hearty good-will, And salute the good people on Pallas's hill, Let them hear and admire father Aeschylus still In his office of old which again he must fill: -You must guide and direct them, Instruct and correct them, With a lesson in verse, For you'll find them much worse, Greater fools than before, and their folly much more, And more numerous far than the blockheads of yore— -And give Cleophon 1 this, And bid him not miss. But be sure to attend To the summons I send: To Nicomachus 2 too, And the rest of the crew That devise and invent New taxes and tribute. Are summonses sent, Which you'll mind to distribute. Bid them come to their graves, Or, like runaway slaves, If they linger and fail, We shall drag them to jail; Down here in the dark With a brand and a mark.

AES I shall do as you say; But the while I'm away, Let the seat that I held Be by Sophocles fill'd,

¹ See note, p 317, other names of obscure demagogues occur in the original Nicomachus, see Mitford's History, ch 22, sec 1

As deservedly reckon'd My pupil and second In learning and merit And tragical spirit——And take special caro, Keep that reprobate there Far aloof from the Chair, Let him never sit in it An hour or a minute, By chance or design To profane what was mine.

P Bring forward the torches!—The Chorus shall

And attend on the Poet in triumph and state With a thundering chant of majestical tone To wish him farewell, with a tune of his own.

[HEXAMETERS]

In order to give English Hexaincters a fair chance, it should be recollected that they are essentially a very slow and solomn measure, each line consisting of six bars, and each bar either of two crotchets, or of a crotchet and two quavers—whereas, the English Heroic verse contains only two bars and a half, and in those instances in which the half bar is placed at the end, may be regarded as a truncated form of the scazon Iambio the regular metrical Hoxameter may consequently be considered as somewhat longer, or slower at least in enunciation, than an entire Heroic couplet.

The reader may perhaps observe an irregularity in the second line (what the grammarians call an Anacrousis—1. e unaccented syllables prefixed to the first ictus), this would be inadmissible in the regular Classical Hexameter, but the irregularity is so little offensive to the ear, that the writer in other attempts to construct English Hexameter has found himself in more than one instance unconsciously falling into it. He has therefore preferred to leave it as it stands, an instance of the liberty which may be deemed allowable in adapting to the English language this difficult, but by no means impracticable metre.

CHORUS.

Now may the powers of the earth give a safe and speedy departure

To the Bard at his second birth, with a prosperous

happy revival;

And may the city, fatigued with wars and long revolution,

At length be brought to return to just and wise resolutions,

Long in peace to remain—Let restless Cleophon hasten Far from amongst us here—since wars are his only diversion,

Thrace, his native land, will afford him wars in abundance.